Grit Directions May Change---and Leadership Too

Pallid Plans Point Up Pearson Dilemma

By RON COLLISTER
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pearson's blueprint for this session of parliament gropes with the challenge of the double squeeze.

● A prime minister can't bind the hands of a successor with a whole new slate of ideas at a time when party leadership and party direction may be changing.

● The throne speech that the government placed in the hands of Governor General Vanier Tuesday read like the tail-end of a four-year program accidentally interrupted by the Nov. 8 election.

● There is so much house-keeping to be done in this session that there won't be much time for legislation, anyway.

● Before the end of March, the Commons has to approve spending estimates of more than $7,000,000,000, then move to the spending for the next year.

● The 2,500-word speech showed hardly any sign of the change in direction that is expected from the resignation of finance minister Walter Gordon, his replacement by Mitchell Sharp, and the arrival in the cabinet of Trade Minister Robert Winters.

This change will probably be seen in the Spring budget.

● In the throne speech, there is a hint of a victory for Mr. Gordon in the retention of the proposed Canada Development Corporation.

● But is it a victory? A government spokesman said last night that the corporation does not have high rating among proposed legislation.

● And there is speculation that leaving it in the throne speech is a step towards quiet scrapping next year.

● The throne speech was mainly a replay of the speech that General Vanier read in the same senate chamber on April 5 last year, plus a promise to implement a handful of election promises.

● Avoided are:

● Any depth discussion of the threat of inflation. The speech says only that "it

Tired-Blood Speech Opposition Agrees

By FRASER KELLY
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—Led by Conservative Chief John Diefenbaker, opposition leaders vehemently tore the Throne Speech apart Tuesday, serving notice that the 27th Parliament could be one of the longest and roughest on record.

Branding the speech "pallid, weak and anemic," Mr. Diefenbaker indicated he would seize the earliest opportunity to move no confidence in the government. (See Pages 3 and 5.)

● 'CONDEMN IT'

And he exhorted all other opposition groups to join him in condemnation of the government for refusing to boost old age pensions from $75 to $100. "We intend to demand the increase when the opportunity arises. No excuses for not defeating the government will be acceptable for those who are in need today," he said.

● Diefenbaker ANGERED He pointed out that a defeat of the government in the House would not necessarily mean another election. Governor General Vanier could call on him to form a government.

Any hope that the last six months away from the Commons had mellowed Mr. Diefenbaker or his followers evaporated with the throne speech.

● 'FORCES FIGHT'

"The speech forces us to fight," said former agriculture minister Alvin Hamilton. "There eventually has to be a confrontation on this (pension) issue. Mr. Diefenbaker said the speech was a 'photostat copy of the last one' and it indicated the government has done nothing for 200 days."

● NO HOPE

"There's no hope in it for the old-age pensioners or the veterans, nothing to meet the rising cost of living. If you can find any inspiration in the production of such an anemic document, you'll be one of the few," he told a newsmen.

Mr. Diefenbaker said the whole government program showed a "conversion" in Liberal policy from former finance minister Walter Gordon to Trade and Commerce Minister Robert Winters.

● 'WATERED DOWN'

"Everything seems to have been watered down to meet the wishes of the new Toronto minister," he said.

He said Mr. Gordon's proposal of a Canadian Development Corporation was "just placed in the throne speech for decorative effect. There will be no serious effort to bring it in."

● A 'PUNY' SPEECH

Asked to describe the speech in one word, Mr. Diefenbaker paused, then said: "Puny."

Banking News Cheerful

Premier Bennett Tuesday labelled the Throne speech from Ottawa a "milk and water" speech for children, rather than a "tea and coffee" one for adults.

"To be fair," he said after reading press reports of the opening of Parliament, "no government gives too much of its policy in a speech from the Throne."

● DEALT WITH LATER

"Policy takes money, and money comes from the budget," which is dealt with later in the session, he said.

The premier was pleased to

Ironsi Keeps Lid on Nigeria As 50 Officers Executed

Lagos (AP)—An army power struggle has followed Nigeria's military take-over with perhaps as many as 50 officers reported executed and an unsuccessful attempt made to assassinate the country's new leader, Maj. Gen. Aguiyi Ironsi.

Ironsi claimed, however, that all military units in the country had pledged loyalty to his new regime.

● MURDER ATTEMPT

Reliable sources said the confused army struggle was around Ironsi and between rival factions. They said up to 50 officers had been executed. A lieutenant-colonel was executed for attempting to kill Ironsi.

Officials in London reported earlier Ironsi seemed in control. Backing this up, Britain said it had given full diplomatic recognition to the new government in its former colony.

● BODIES FOUND

Meanwhile, a Nigerian government confirmed the death of former finance minister, Chief Festus Okotie Eboh, whose body, together with those of five other persons, has been found in a shallow grave some 30 miles outside this federal capital.

The discovery increased fears for the safety of former prime minister, Sir Abubakar Tafawa Balewa, who was kidnapped with Eboh in the early hours of the army revolt Saturday.

Nigeria's feuding political parties unanimously, meanwhile, promised their support for the military government with pledges of loyalty.

Even the formerly-dominant Northern Peoples' Congress, whose old leader, Sir Ahmadu Bello, the Sardauna of Sokoto, and his wife were murdered in their Kaduna palace on the first day of the coup attempt, appealed to its members to co-operate with the army rulers.

Ironsi's role in the revolt remained confused.

● TO SAVE BLOODSHED

He said he moved to crush the rebellion, found the rebels did not want to fight and was asked by politicians to take over to save further bloodshed.

But there were reports the rebel officers moved in on the army chief Saturday giving him a choice, as they gave many other top military men, of joining or dying.

SUBSIDY CUT HITS FERRIES

By JACK FRY
Legislative Reporter

Premier Bennett announced Tuesday that British Columbia would delay its plans for building one or two more ferries because of the subsidy cut announced this week in Ottawa.

Shoots Colleagues

Nuclear Expert Berserk

UPTON, N.Y. (UPI)—A nuclear engineer, described as "a very quiet and friendly person," went berserk at the Atomic Energy Commission's Brookhaven laboratory Tuesday, shot three fellow scientists, attempted to shoot a fourth and then committed suicide.

Chief of Suffolk County detectives Oray Edwards said that Michael Maresca, 34, came to work at the sprawling, 3,500-acre laboratory armed with a shotgun, stripped to the waist and nail polish or lipstick daubed Indian-fashion on his chest and forehead.

Edwards said Maresca first entered one of the large labs where James Powell, 33, another nuclear engineer, was sitting at a desk by the door.

● FIRED BLAST

Without uttering a word, Maresca fired one blast at Powell, striking him in the chest.

Maresca then ran down a corridor to an office where he shot associate physicist Martin Zuker in the hip and hand. He then went to a laboratory room where Leif Hjarne, a visiting assistant physicist from Sweden, was seated with his back toward the door.

Maresca shot Hjarne in the back.

The berserk scientist then fired another shot through the door of assistant chemical engineer Russel Bleis' laboratory, but missed him.

Maresca then dashed outside to his car, placed the shotgun barrel inside his mouth and pulled the trigger. He was dead when co-workers and police got to his car.

He was commenting on the announcement made Monday by Transport Minister Pickersgill that a restored but reduced federal shipbuilding subsidy would not apply to vessels built by provincial governments.

● The premier said this decision was aimed "right against British Columbia" and that it was just part of Mr. Pickersgill's "anti-British Columbia point of view."

● SHORTSIGHTED

"It's too bad when the federal government would rather give a subsidy to the CPR, a private firm, than to a ferry system which is operated by the government," he said.

"This is a very shortsighted policy, completely unworthy of the federal government."

The premier then asked, through the medium of the press, for Prime Minister Pearson to "take a second look" at Mr. Pickersgill's decision.

● PLANS DELAYED

"I find it hard to believe this would be the considered and final policy of his government."

"Until we learn more definite word, we won't build any more (ferries) for a while," said Mr. Bennett.

He said plans for building "one or two more ships" would be delayed, but not scrapped completely, because "We won't let any foolish policy in Ottawa hold British Columbia up."

● NISTER SHIP

The premier did not elaborate on what ships would be held up, but it was understood that one of them might have been a sister ship for the sea-going Queen of Prince Rupert, which is nearing completion at Victoria Machinery Depot in Victoria.

"There might be a little jealousy on Ottawa's part because our ferry fleet is larger than their navy," he concluded.

● DOESN'T MAKE SENSE

Yarrow's Ltd. general manager John Wallace agreed with Premier Bennett that the move seemed directed against the provincial government.

"It doesn't appear to make much sense to me that when subsidies are in effect for other classifications of building that it should not apply to provincial government ferries. It would appear this was aimed at B.C.," he said.

● TENDERS HELD UP

"What effect it will have on the industry is difficult to say at this time," he said.

He added that builders believed tenders for construction of a second Prince Rupert ferry were being held for a decision on the subsidy.

"We can seriously hope the B.C. government will continue to call tenders for ferries in B.C.," he said.

He said that conditions in B.C. were different from other parts of Canada where the federal government, through the Canadian National Railways, operates car and rail car ferries.

Esquimalt Collision Fatal

Bror Nels Ivar Granwall, 54, of 5630 Alderly was killed in a two-car collision at Craigflower and Lamson in Esquimalt early today.

Mr. Granwall was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Joseph's Hospital at 12:25 a.m., only 18 minutes after the collision.

Rhodesian Spirits Reach High Point

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (LAT)—Rain and the Nigerian military coup, plus official assurances that gasoline supplies are adequate, combined Tuesday to raise white Rhodesian spirits to the highest point since Christmas.

Much of Matabeleland, the cattle-growing southwestern region, continued to get rains which started last Saturday, although much more is needed to end the two-year drought in some districts. Cattlemen hoped they would not have to carry out a government plan to move their stock to the northeast. Some cattle already have been brought to fields within sight of Salisbury.

The crisis in Nigeria gave encouragement to Rhodesians who feel the developments there will bring new pressures on British Prime Minister Harold Wilson to ease his economic sanctions against the regime of Premier Ian Smith.

A government official saw the Nigerian coup as the biggest boost thus far to British Conservatives in Parliament, who are seeking a settlement with Smith without the prior destruction of the Rhodesian economy.

"With the Nigerian Federation on the brink of disintegrating, even Wilson must have doubts about pushing Rhodesia toward black majority rule," a Rhodesian official said.

And British taxpayers, regardless of their party, must question the wisdom of airlifting goods to Zambia at enormous cost in order to prevent the disruption of normal trade patterns which has already taken place between Rhodesia, Zambia and other nations. The sanctions may already have done permanent damage to the economy here and some observers fear the damage will ultimately have to be paid for by Britain if the Smith regime collapses.

GETTING AROUND

Smith aides believe this point is getting across to visiting members of Britain's Parliament, at least to the Tories who see in the Nigerian developments the possibility that British troops might be sent to aid in restoring order.

Smith's assurances to the nation Monday night were generally well received in Salisbury, particularly his pledge that gasoline rations will not be cut. Uncertainty over this issue was one of the most telling effects of British oil sanctions. But industry spokesmen confirmed Tuesday that the five oil companies operating here have total stocks of 200,000 tons of gasoline and diesel fuel.

TWO YEARS

This is claimed to be enough to fill Rhodesia's needs for two years at current ration levels, and few persons doubt that alternative crude oil supplies will appear if the embargo drags on.

With even non-priorly motorists, Rhodesians were accepting cheerfully the fact that the country would get only 400 dozen tennis balls in the first quarter of 1966, although normal consumption is 1,600 dozen.

OLYMPICS

Tennis fans could take heart in the fact that the Rhodesian Lawn Tennis Association has entered the 1966 Davis Cup tournament with no rejection. Rhodesians have also been told that Avery Brundage, president of the International Olympic Committee, has already ruled that he sees no bar to Rhodesia's entry in the 1968 Mexico City games.

hear that revision would be done on banking legislation, which might give the province a better chance of getting a charter for a Bank of B.C.

HIGHER GRANTS

He said he hoped the federal government's plans for increased grants to universities and a scholarship program would be made public before budget time in the provincial legislature.

Asked whether he would consider altering the budget for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1966, if more federal money was available in these areas, Mr. Bennett replied:

UNTIL LAST DAY

"My budget is never finalized until the last day—we are always willing to take a second look in British Columbia."

The premier would not comment on whether he thought $300,000,000 would be enough for establishment of a health resources fund. (Health Minister Eric Martin said recently he did not think this would be enough.)

Announcement that the government would continue to delay federal construction projects in areas where the construction industry was under heavy pressure from private building would probably not apply to British Columbia, Mr. Bennett said.

The inflationary trend was in Toronto and Montreal rather than B.C., he said.

NO NEED

This had already been pointed out to the federal government and there was no need for a cutback here in federal projects, said the premier.

His advice to Ottawa: "Canada has got to drive its economic system at 70 and 80 miles an hour instead of 20 miles an hour."

Cigarette Smoking Adds to Pollution

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: I read that one health authority says that "the air pollution we breathe daily is equivalent to smoking two packs of cigarettes a day." Even a common, mental dishwasher like myself knows better than that. Years back when I used to smoke two packs a day I had a chronic cough and chest pains, and even coughed up blood at times.

After banishing the habit, my cough and chest pains ceased entirely, yet I'm still breathing that so-called air pollution.

I also have two nieces who smoked and had troubles. When they broke the habit, they felt better, too.—T.C.

I don't know what "health authority" you are quoting, but I think he's quite a mathematician if he thinks that he can translate "air pollution" into so many cigarettes, or so many packs.

No two people smoke cigarettes just the same way. Some inhale deeply, some don't. Some light a cigarette and wave it around and throw it away half smoked. Others smoke it down to the last half inch. "Two packs a day" means different things. So does "air pollution."

There's one thing for sure, and only about one: No matter how much or how little air pollution there is, it's a lot worse for the fellow who adds his own personal pollution from smoking.

Two bad things are worse than one. Let's not waste too much time trying to decide which kind of air pollution is "worse." If either is harmful, let's try to reduce it.

Dear Dr. Molner: My husband had a heart attack two months ago. X-rays now have revealed an enlarged heart. Does a heart ever return to normal size with proper medication, etc?—Mrs. N.G.

A heart enlarges as part of nature's endeavor to compensate for a defect or weakness in the heart. Sometimes there may be some reduction in size if, in one manner or another, the defect is corrected, but it is not to be expected that the heart

Universities May Get More Money

OTTAWA (CP)—A substantial increase in federal financial aid to universities for the 1966-67 academic year will be proposed to Parliament this session, the throne speech said Tuesday.

This "initial response" to the "acute financial difficulties" faced by universities and colleges would be followed up with other steps after discussion with the provinces.

BLADEN REPORT

The Bladen committee report on education last October recommended federal grants totaling at least $330,000,000 in the next fiscal year, rising to more than $500,000,000 by 1970. The current level is about $300,000,000 annually.

During the election campaign, Prime Minister Pearson said the government accepted the Bladen estimates that university enrolment would reach 461,000 in the 1975-76 academic year with total government spending at $1,704,000,000.

GOOD RETURNS

Mr. Pearson said education is an investment that yields good returns but a federal response must come only after consultation with the provinces.

After announcing the government's plan to increase grants, the throne speech said the government will "convene a meeting to consider continuing action in a manner that recognizes differences in the educational systems and institutions of the provinces." It did not elaborate.

HUMAN RESOURCES

It said that although the government fully respects the jurisdiction of the provinces in education matters, it recognizes a "pressing obligation" to foster more effective development of human resources by aiding the expansion of higher education, and providing more opportunity for young persons to attend.

LOAN ACT

It reiterated past Liberal proposals to introduce a system of scholarships and bursaries, and said there will be amendments to the Student Loans Act.

Education was one of the major issues in the federal election campaign, with Opposition leader Diefenbaker calling for an increase in per capita grants to universities to $5 from $2 annually. The New Democratic Party advocated free tuition for university students.

OPT-OUT

In Montreal Monday, Quebec's Premier Lesage said his government intends to exercise its jurisdiction in all fields assigned to the province in the British North America Act.

He said his government would ask to opt out unconditionally from any federal program to provide further assistance to universities. Quebec wants its share of the money without having to give a commitment that it will be used for education, he said.

Ottawa Streamlining Departments

OTTAWA (CP)—The reorganization of three federal departments and the creation of four others will enable the administration to respond "more speedily and efficiently" to modern-day problems, the throne speech said Tuesday.

The speech said a government organization bill, announced by Prime Minister Pearson in late December, will be placed before Parliament to:

- Convert the department of citizenship and immigration into a department of manpower policies needed to sustain production and eliminate pockets of poverty.

- Broaden the forestry department into a department of forestry and rural development to foster rural development programs.

- Create a department of energy, mines and resources so that federal policies in these fields can be integrated.

- Convert the department of northern affairs and national resources into a department of Indian affairs and northern affairs to handle the "special needs of the indigenous people of Canada and the development of the North."

- Set up a new department, as yet unnamed, responsible for the special areas of legislation concerned with business. This department will handle the Bankruptcy Act, the Companies Act, the Combines Investigation and Research Act, Patents and Copyrights and trade marks.

- Establish the office of solicitor-general as a full government department to handle the problems of corrections and crime, the coordination of police services and intelligence in combating organized crime.

- Establish a department of the treasury board to improve management and administration within the public service.

These changes, the speech said, will "adapt the structure of administration to new and changing conditions and so better meet the needs of our people."

National Anthem Vote Possible This Session

OTTAWA (CP)—The government will make another attempt, on the eve of the centennial of Confederation, to have O Canada adopted as the national anthem.

The throne speech, as it did last year, also proposes God Save the Queen as the royal anthem in Canada.

GRIT PLANK

A Liberal promise in the 1963 election campaign was to propose a distinctive Canadian anthem within two years of taking office. The deadline expired last April 22.

But with the centennial year 11 months away, and the government evidently trying to instill a sense of unity among Canadians, vigorous efforts to adopt an anthem are expected in this session.

TWO ANTHEMS

There were bitter debates in the Commons in 1964 on which English and French versions of O Canada's lyrics should be used.

A government resolution on the two anthems was introduced May 28, 1964, but was sidetracked by a 33-day battle on a resolution for the maple leaf flag.

The flag was adopted and finally flown last February.

Reference to the anthems was made in the speech from the throne last year but wasn't debated during the session.

In neither speech has it been specified which version of O Canada lyrics will be proposed.

MOZART MARCH

The tune was composed in 1880 by Calixa Lavallee as a patriotic march to be played at a French-Canadian cultural meeting held that year in Quebec City.

The opening bars bear some resemblance to the "Priests' March" in Mozart's Magic Flute.

FRENCH LYRIC

The French words were written the same year by Mr. Justice Sir Adolphe - Basile Routhier of Quebec's Superior Court.

Sir Adolphe's lyrics referred to the Cross and the St. Lawrence River.

ACCEPTED

Different English lyrics were written in 1908 by Robert Stanley Weir, another Quebec Superior Court justice. As dozens of other English versions died out, it gradually became accepted across Canada.

A government spokesman said Tuesday the proposal for the two anthems could be sent to a special House committee where the dispute over lyrics could be thrashed out.

TWO POEMS

Conservative MPs argued in the 1964 session that the French and English lyrics should be literal translations rather than poems of different inspiration.

A private member's bill by Perry Rayn (L-Toronto Spadina) proposed adoption of the Routhier and Weir versions but was talked out and died on the order paper.

DRAW FIRE

The reference to God Save the Queen as the royal anthem is expected to draw fire from the nine Creditiste MPs whose argument has been that Canada can't adopt the national anthem of another country.

Loffmark

Canadian Money 'Unsafe'

VANCOUVER (CP)—Canadians are losing confidence in their money, says provincial cabinet minister Ralph Loffmark.

Speaking in an interview Monday the minister of industrial development said this is why there is a demand for private pension plans to be cashed in now that the Canada Pension Plan is operating.

"More and more people are less and less confident the money they paid into pension plans will have a purchasing value commensurate with their payments," he said.

NO SOLUTION

There seems no immediate solution to "very substantial withdrawals" from private pension plans, he said.

He said he attributes the withdrawals to a lack of confidence in federal government maintaining the purchasing power of the dollar.

EVIDENCE

"The present inflationary policy followed by a succession of federal governments is causing a flight by the population from confidence in our money," he said.

The withdrawals from pension plans are evidence of the loss of confidence, he said.

I'M CONCERNED

"As a minister I am concerned," Mr. Loffmark said. "Any serious flight of savings would be catastrophic for the economy of Canada."

"This is the terrible risk that is involved in deficit financing, to which Canada and the U.S. appear to be committed at the federal level."

Another Compromise

IF IT HAS DONE nothing else, the Canadian government's decision to restore in part the shipbuilding subsidy has removed the uncertainty that has plagued Canada's shipyards since the subsidy was dropped last February.

For the next six years, at least, shipowners and shipbuilders will know how they stand, and that is something.

The reduction of the subsidy from 35 per cent to 25 per cent represents yet another of those face-saving compromises for which the present government has achieved notoriety.

The government's intention after 1969 to cut 2 per cent a year off the subsidy until it reaches 17 per cent in 1972, when, presumably, it will remain constant, gives the shipbuilding industry time to plan and look ahead.

It could also produce a minor shipbuilding boom in the next three years during which time the full 25 per cent subsidy will be available.

The federal government's attitude is that shipbuilding firms have a chance to diversify themselves into the heavy engineering industry—a line of endeavor that was not so opportunity-laden a few years ago as it is now—thus reducing the subsidy need.

The main point of controversy in the new plan is the exclusion from the subsidy of vessels to be built for federal or provincial governments.

This is a serious matter for the expansion prospects of the B.C. ferry service, and is one which could draw unfavorable comment when related to the federally subsidized ferry operations in other parts of the country.

B.C. government spokesmen have quickly pointed out that this smacks of discrimination against the West by a federal government which draws little of its support from these parts.

On the other hand, of course, the B.C. ferry service has been to some extent lucky in that it has built all but the first two of its massive fleet under the 35 per cent subsidy introduced by the Conservative government.

Only on unordered ships will the subsidy not be paid.

The exclusion of such construction as the drilling rig being built at VMD for Shell Oil is probably reasonable enough. Drilling rigs come into the category of equipment rather than shipping, and it must be doubtful if the oil companies could have expected any such relief.

Rising Taxes

CITY HALL disclaims responsibility rightly enough for the sharp rise in Victoria's assessment total this year, specifically that part of it which results from revaluation and not from new construction. True it is that the civic assessors are bound to follow a provincial formula in this respect, and when market prices advance so must values for taxation, in proportion.

But it is also true that if assessments are raised and the tax rate set by city council is not correspondingly reduced, then taxes have been increased, to the advantage of the civic treasury (as well, incidentally, as to the provincial government in relation to schools).

For this reason it will not be particularly comforting, especially to those property owners who bear the brunt of the higher assessments, that Mayor Toone says the council will make a determined effort to hold the line on the tax rate this year, and with a reasonable chance of success.

The increase in the taxable values, it is estimated, will boost city revenue for 1966 by more than $800,000 if the mill rate stays the same, and this is the equivalent of seven mills. In other words, if Victoria could get along on the same amount of income as last year, the rate could be reduced from 62.9 mills to 55.9.

It can not, of course, be a substantial rise in school costs, taking up perhaps as much as one-half of this potential seven-mill difference, and not within the council's power to reduce. Other expenses are rising too, and no one will want to see a drastic curtailment of the program of civic betterment which has had such pleasing results so far.

Nevertheless, Victoria's "revitalization" process will not be fostered if taxes grow so onerous that merchants and others tend to move out, and this suggests that the mayor and council should make a determined effort not merely to hold the line on the mill rate, but to reduce it this year by any sensible means.

Alarming Answers

COMMENTING on Canada's accession to the 1949 United Nations Convention on Road Traffic—which will enable Canadians to have international driving permits and licence plates valid in 75 member countries—The Ottawa Journal notes that "the agreement does not mean a change to international wordless traffic signs in this country, although these are generally accepted as a sensible long-range aim by traffic authorities."

So they may be. But the traffic authorities would seem to be wisely cautious in not rushing to adopt them. In Britain, where the international road symbol is proliferating, a recent survey of drivers' and pedestrians' interpretations of the picture-signs had results that could only be described as alarming.

For instance, the "no overtaking" sign is a red circle around the rear view of a red car and a black car side by side. The London Times reports that 17 per cent of motorists interviewed did not know the meaning of the sign, 23 per cent got the answer wrong, and among the most frightening of the suppositions were that the symbol meant dual roadway or pass on the inside.

Thirty-two per cent of pedestrians thought a no-entry sign had quite different meanings, such as a crossing; 84 per cent of drivers could not recognize a red circle around a motorcycle over a car as the sign prohibiting all motor vehicles.

Even the pedestrian crossing sign (not dissimilar to the wordless one in use in Victoria) meant nothing or the wrong thing to some.

All of which raises the question: why not have words as well as the internationally understood—or misunderstood—pictures?

At least this would eliminate misinterpretation by the nationals of each country, getting the message in their own language. And the meaning of the symbols could then be better remembered when in foreign parts.

Large 'Anglo' Community

The British Ties of Argentina

By J. HALIBRO FERGUSON

ARGENTINA is a country which has more connections with Britain than any outside the former Empire and the English speaking world.

Indeed, 150 years ago, when Argentina was still part of the Spanish Viceroyalty of the River Plate, an optimistic London publisher produced a book entitled The New Colony of Buenos Aires, which took it for granted that the country was already in the Empire.

His assumption was based on two British invasions in 1805 and 1806, now known as the Defensa and the Reconquista, which however ended in ignominious defeat at the hands of the colonists, a fact given great prominence in Argentine history books though not in British ones.

These episodes, however, did not engender Argentine hostility towards Britain but rather the reverse. At the simplest level, the colonists felt rather pleased with themselves at having defeated the forces of a major European power. But there were more serious implications than that.

In the first place, the Spanish Viceroy Sobremonte had prudently removed himself and his Spanish soldiers from Buenos Aires to the provincial city of Cordoba, this demonstrating to the colonists that the Mother Country could not be relied upon for its most basic function, the protection of its colonies from foreign attack.

At the same time, the British, during their brief occupation of Buenos Aires and their longer one of Montevideo across the river, had made the colonists more than ever aware of the restrictions they suffered under Spanish rule. Spain maintained a strict censorship. The British lifted it, and in Montevideo (later to become the capital of Uruguay when it left the Argentine Confederation) published the first newspaper the viceroyalty had ever seen, La Estrella del Sur (Southern Star).

Perhaps more important still for a merchant community, while the Spaniards had restricted the colonies' commerce to trading exclusively with Spain, and prohibited them from cultivating anything which Spain herself produced, the British were all for free trade and did not care what the colonists grew. (They also treated the Roman Catholic Church with respect, which surprised the colonists, who had been led to expect different behavior from heretics).

Finally, the colonists reasoned that if they could successfully get rid of the British, they could also get rid of the Spaniards, which they proceeded to do between 1810 and 1816. Thus, although the idealism behind the Argentine War of Independence came largely from revolutionary France, the practical motivation may be said to have come from pragmatic Britain.

(This may go some way to explain a dichotomy which has persisted throughout Argentine history between a hard-headed practicality in business affairs and a frequent ineptitude in politics, which has given rise to a local proverb, "Argentina grows great in spite of her governments." Another proverb, "God is an Argentine," means that if He were not the country would have come to grief long ago.)

During the War of Independence Britain's more-than-benevolent neutrality was of enormous assistance to the Argentine cause. Among other things there was no nonsense about a Foreign Enlistment Act, so that at one time the Argentine navy had more British subjects in its service than Argentina. It was commanded by one William Brown, whose statue today proudly surveys the wide Buenos Aires avenue named after him.

Independent Argentina immediately formed close links with Britain, particularly after the introduction of refrigeration which made Britain the biggest importer of her primary product, beef. British capital and engineering built the railways which opened up the vast and fertile pampas, and British companies set up the gasworks and waterworks in the growing cities.

As a result today these buildings stand out as Victorian Gothic monuments in Spanish townscapes. Constitution railway terminus was modelled on Glasgow Central, and many rural stations are identical with those on Scotland's old West Highland Railway. Until 1943 traffic kept to the left, and railways and tube trains still do.

At the same time British businessmen and ranchers settled in the country in the same way as they settled in Canada and Australia, and a large Anglo-American community grew up. Today there are 60,000 of them with dual nationality, and countless more who no longer hold British passports.

The British, as always, brought with them their own customs and institutions, and some of these have become an integral part of the Argentine scene. The two major country clubs outside Buenos Aires are Ranelagh and Hurlingham (another, mysteriously, is the Hindu Club). Afternoon tea is an established local custom. The big London stores, Harrods, and Macys, have sister enterprises in Buenos Aires. In the business district there are solid Edwardian pubs called the Criterion, the Salisbury and Lloyd's Bar.

There is also a modern (and clean) one called Dirty Dick's, and one called El Principe de Gales (the Prince of Wales) in honor of a celebrated visit by the present Duke of Windsor in the 1920s.

Soccer is notoriously Argentine's national game, and team names point to its origin. River Plate (not Rio de la Platte, Boca Juniors, Newell's Old Boys. Though Argentines do not play cricket there is a Buenos Aires Cricket Club for the Anglos, and there was a national outcry in the 1950s when President Peron proposed to put its ground to a different use. The surprised dictator backed down.

British influence has also infiltrated the language to an extent which would horrify the Spanish Academy. When the first railwaymen came out from Britain, Spanish dictionaries had not yet caught up with the steam age, so they invented their own terms, translating literally. Thus a marshalling yard is a patio and a railway cross-tie is a durmiente, from the English "sleepers." With platform (in Spanish and/or terrace) they gave up: it is plataformas.

This linguistic traffic is not one way. Anglo-Argentines call the countryside the camp (Spanish campo), a city block is a square (Spanish cuadra) and a cinema is a cine. Visiting Britons, not to mention visiting North Americans, are sometimes baffled by local items in the English-language Buenos Aires Herald. Far more conventional English is often spoken by upper-class Argentines (a surprising number of them) who were educated at Roman Catholic public schools in England.

Of course, this pervasive British influence, and the identification of the British and the Anglos with the well-to-do and upper class Argentines, has led to resentment in some quarters. During the Second World War the dignified Argentine lady who belonged to the pro-Axis Juventud Nacionalista movement had a way of parading the streets shouting "Uno, dos, tres, muera el chanchito inglés!" (One, two, three, death to the English pig!). But public reaction to this was typified by the dignified Argentine lady who rang up the British embassy: "I think you ought to know," she said, "that there are some young men outside my house saying things about the English which should not be said."

She had complained to a policeman, who had said he could do nothing unless a breach of the peace was threatened. "And the English never end—" and the English never break the peace! Not in Argentina, anyway. Why should they?

Menziés successor as Liberal Party leader and prime minister will be Harold Holt, deputy party leader since 1956, and treasurer (finance minister) since 1958. Holt has never handled foreign affairs, although as successfully minister for national service and labor, minister for immigration and trade and treasury. He has travelled extensively to international conferences.

He is a middle-of-the-road man, hardworking rather than brilliant, a good mixer and tactician. His first task must be to reach satisfactory working arrangements with the Country Party for the continuance of the coalition government. This may not be easy. The Liberals have 52 seats in the house and the Country Party 20, against Labor's 50, so the non-Labor parties must still hang together to prevent any risk of hanging separately, resulting from even a relatively small voting swing to the Labor Party at next December's elections.

John McEwen, Country Party leader, and deputy prime minister since 1958, has at times entertained an understandable ambition to succeed Menziés. But the disparity in the government parties' strengths, and the tendency as the population drifts from the country to the cities for the Liberal Party to grow while the Country Party remains stationary, precludes such a promotion. McEwen will doubtless become Holt's deputy and continue in his important trade and industry portfolio.

Menziés will step down at 71 not because of failing health or impaired faculties—he is as vigorous in political activity and debates over—but because a general election must be held later this year and, if there is to be a new Liberal Party leader, it is only fair that he should have an opportunity to consult

THE expected resignation of Sir Robert Menziés as prime minister later this month will, in every sense, end a remarkable period of Australian political and economic history.

It will end a 16-year "reign" by one towering political figure—not quite a "benevolent dictatorship," because Menziés (like Australians generally) has too deep-seated a respect for the forms and substance of democratic government, for that. But in the final analysis Menziés, throughout his recent prime ministership, has dominated Australian thinking and actions in every field of government.

There is no one in Parliament, or outside it, who could hope to continue such a one-man control. When Menziés steps down he will announce his decision within a short time: the government of Australia will revert to a more orthodox level. Menziés would be first to deny that his many cabinets since he won office for a coalition of the Liberal and Country Parties, in December, 1949, have been other than free, unfettered debates in the true democratic parliamentary tradition.

Menziés will step down at 71 not because of failing health or impaired faculties—he is as vigorous in political activity and debates over—but because a general election must be held later this year and, if there is to be a new Liberal Party leader, it is only fair that he should have an opportunity to consult

Case for Censorship

I'VE read the news story in which Professor Emery and Mrs. Helen Roxney are quoted as saying there should be no censorship. And since what I read affects me:

As a youngster I remember mourning for one full week, much to my mother's annoyance, while reading "Gone With the Wind." Some books filled me with pity for all humans and today some make me laugh and some make me cry.

There are others who are affected by what they read, particularly the young.

Several youths, after viewing so-called harmless TV westerns, told me a man had to fight to relieve his tensions when he got mad at someone. Two brothers fought and took their idea to juvenile detention, though their father is not a fighting man. Charity of thought and respect for others' opinions has little place in westerns.

Girls' magazines are known for lusty insinuation that sex is fine, anytime, the more the better. Obscene films, and literature, result in teenagers believing it is harmful to inhibit oneself sexually.

America's FBI claims there is a proven relationship between pornographic literature and juvenile delinquency. Former Detroit Inspector H. W. Case said: "There has not been a sex murder in the history of our department in which the killer was not an avid reader of lewd magazines."

One does not have to read too much national news to find a news story of a boy confessing to killing for a "thrill," some learned in crime comics.

It is fairly well proven that some pervers are created by overbearing mothers and Milquetoast fathers, and others by the company they keep. All are acclimatized further by pornographic material.

It is an extremely rare case in which a drug addict has been helped by being given plentiful drugs. And just as rare that a sick mind has been assisted by sick material.

Freedom of choice is fine, but do we let the emotionally immature play with dynamite? Do the mature want to?

M. MALONE.

Material Sought

A plea for help: I am attempting to collect sufficient material on Gracie Fields to make up a special souvenir album to present to the British Music Hall Society museum.

"Our Gracie" visited the Royal Theatre at Victoria whilst on a concert tour of Canada and the U.S.A. (I understand she was made very welcome, and all concerned had a very happy time!).

I wonder if any of your readers could help with any souvenirs? Items such as programs, ticket stubs, advertising material, newspaper clippings, etc., would all be useful. I really would be very pleased to have even the smallest contribution for the album. Perhaps, in return, I could do any possible small favors from this side of the ocean? Naturally all expenses would be refunded.

Better Driving

Having been driving automobiles since 1914, I have observed a variety of behavior patterns of drivers of vehicles. One manoeuvre that seems to stand out as particularly dangerous is that of tail-gating and passing; this may be more noticeable in my case as I rarely drive over the posted speeds.

Quite a large percentage of drivers overtake others and tail-gate with obvious impatience and will pass only to occupy the space that the driver ahead has been trying to keep as a safe following distance. Many times I have had to reduce speed quickly to permit the passing auto to get ahead of me so that oncoming traffic could be avoided.

How are these over-anxious drivers to be educated? Should there be some concentrated effort to spot these driving offenders? When spotted and listed in sufficient numbers in a given area, they should be requested to attend classes in order to teach these offenders proper driving procedures.

It is suggested that when licence plates are issued for vehicles, a "thorough driving" course booklet be issued the licence holder. A charge for the booklet, sufficient to cover cost of printing and distribution, could be made. Possibly insurance companies could be induced to contribute a share of the cost—to be regarded as preventive measures.

Too many people are being killed and injured apart from the excessive damage to property to let these conditions continue without measures being taken. I would be the first to complain about the loss of freedom, but, if compulsion is a last resort to save lives, then, let us have it.

I would suggest that instead of so much stress on fines and loss of driving privileges where only about one in 20 is apprehended, let us have cruising instructors who would bring attention to wrong driving acts, then let the motorist go his way if not impaired or ill. The instructor for this kind of approach would, of necessity, be a constable having special qualifications for the work and would be trained to make the psychological approach and to use good language.

Sweepstakes

Regarding the letter from A. P. Rainey, Jan. 12, for some years I have silently observed the cross-stitch in Canada regarding lotteries. Recent events have brought me to the point of wishing to be heard. Especially when I read of our law-enforcing agencies beating their chests and howling in headlines, "We have broken the lottery ring." One would almost think that they had captured a million dollars in heroin.

Granted, lotteries are illegal at present and an offence under the Criminal Code. Attempts to instigate repeal of this law have continually been blocked by the lobbying of certain sanctimonious groups in Canada. I personally resent their claim that I should be denied the privilege of buying a lottery ticket for my own good. You show me a man that professes never to have risked a nickel on "chance" and I'll show you a hypocrite.

Let's face it, as long as there are lottery tickets available, people will buy them. Why not keep this money in Canada and do some good with it? Particularly for hospitals and research. While in Australia, I was privileged to observe their lottery system and note the benefits that result therefrom. If our Mr. Bennett would take a long hard look at these benefits in New South Wales alone it would make his 5 per cent tax look like chicken-feed!

I'm with Mr. Rainey, let's do something about it.

Worth the Effort

There must be a reason for D. J. Mawle being refused admittance to Britain and it would appear he has still failed to find it. May I suggest he gets his uncle to check with Immigration, a certain amount of information is available at Canada House, London, and offices in the Midlands. If they are unable to help, suggest he contact his MP. One has only to have lived in Britain recently to know its doors are wide open.

There is the occasional little fish in the big pond, who tries to exert his little authority, and meet them 18 months after coming to Canada from Britain. Despite seven months of planning and rechecking, my husband was held for over two hours at the airport in Montreal; the position was stalemate, until my brother-in-law, a Canadian, decided to contact his lawyer; as if by magic my husband was released. D.J.M. will however, when dealing with authority, be able to understand all that is being said; not like us, interviewed in perfect English, but discussed in French as soon as a telephone was used in our presence.

Good luck. It will be well worth the effort to live in Britain, a great little country still.

Misleading

The recent dramatic statement by one of our $25,000 a year anti-poverty experts would be amusing if it were not so misleading. "Forty millions a year for cat and dog food!" Appalling! But let us get the whole picture by means of very simple arithmetic. Divide the figure by our population and we get the remarkable sum of $2 per person, or, with another simple division, four cents a week. Shocking, isn't it?

And then they fail to deduct the amount of pet food that is tried and eaten by poverty-stricken people who can't afford a real hamburger! Oh, Canada!

Equality at Last

Repatriation Given Polite Burial

By RON COLLISTER
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—The historic dream of true independence for Canada through repatriation of its constitution from London is given a polite burial in the Throne Speech.

Canadians are now as far away as they ever were from getting full control over their constitution, to end those begging trips to London seeking amendments.

The reason is that Premier Lesage of Quebec changed his mind.

In the fall of 1964, Mr. Lesage attended a federal-provincial conference in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, the cradle of Confederation and agreed to a formula for repatriating the constitution, the British North America Act.

It was a glorious day in Canada's history and everyone hailed it as just that.

For 30 years, there had been heated discussion about bringing home the constitution so that Canada could do just what it liked without consulting London.

After the Charlottetown meeting, a federal-provincial conference of experts was held in Ottawa and the details of the agreement were concluded.

NEXT STEP
As the next step, nine provincial legislatures rapidly approved the formula for repatriation, which is called the Fulton-Favreau Formula after two justice ministers who helped draw it up.

But Quebec stalled—and stalled.

Over the past year, Mr. Lesage has been called upon to explain the delay.

He has always flatly denied that it was dead and has denounced newsmen who suggested it was.

But, in Quebec City this week, he finally admitted that adoption of the formula for amending the constitution would become "quickly outmoded" so he no longer supported it.

COLD FEET
As Quebec observers see it, Mr. Lesage began having cold feet when he saw the build-up of opposition to accepting the formula among his opponents in Quebec.

In yesterday's Throne Speech, the matter is dealt with in one meek, dejected paragraph.

POLITE BURIAL
"It remains the objective of my ministers," Governor General Vanier intoned, "to provide that the constitution of Canada be amended in Canada."

Asked if this meant that repatriation is dead, federal sources here pointed to the Lesage inaction and the fact that nothing can be done without Quebec's support.

Tory Leader John Diefenbaker, who, during the election campaign, claimed that the formula was "as dead as a dodo," last night claimed: "This is the death-knell."

He recalled that the Conservative party had stood alone against the formula which, he claimed in the election, would turn Canada into "ten satraps" and put the constitution in a straightjacket for all time.

"Now," he said last night, with a slight smile of success, "it has joined the ranks of the forgotten."

SOCREDS CRITICIZE
Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson criticized the government for not telling Canadians of an alternative plan for bringing the constitution home.

"There is no statement about a new formula to substitute for the old one and the question is as ambiguous as the whole speech."

New Democratic Leader Tommy Douglas said that in his view the throne speech buried the Fulton-Favreau formula.

He criticized the old approach to getting a workable formula that would be agreeable to all and urged a parliamentary committee to hear submissions from interested groups.

EFFECTS ALL
"The constitution of Canada is something that affects all Canadians, not just the Prime Minister and the premiers," Mr. Douglas said.

But he rejected the idea of a confederation conference outside Parliament that is being pressed by Tory Leader Diefenbaker.

"That would be a shambles," said Mr. Douglas.

"no one is sure about it any more."

Even Mr. Lesage didn't want to hear about it or talk about it.

They're buying it quietly, Caouette said.

SPEECH NEGATIVE
The retreat on the Fulton-Favreau formula blended well with the generally negative one of the throne speech.

There was little that was new, omissions of some issues that could have stirred up a storm and, apparently, a calculated attempt to avoid trouble.

LIKE TIGER
In advance, it was reported that Mr. Pearson was coming into the new session "like a tiger."

But it wasn't the kind of speech that a tiger would have carried in its claws.

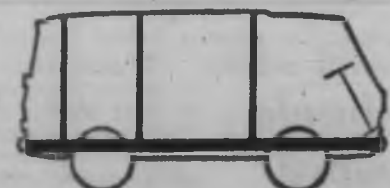

In fact, it sounded more like What's New, Pussycat?

Grits Offer Tepid Plans

Is important that the benefits (of prosperity) should not be jeopardized by excessive costs and prices which would endanger the stability of the economy."

● Changes in immigration, as will be recommended in a white paper to be ready soon.

● The appointment of an ombudsman, to investigate injustices, which was in last year's speech.

● Cuts on election expenses, also in the last speech.

● Any reference to the Municipal Loan Fund, which was set up two years ago with a $400,000 fund and which runs out on March 31.

And the government continues to stretch out its spending on public construction, an area where demand had started to push up prices.

● The balance of payments problem, which gives Canada a billion-dollar deficit this year.

Omitted are:
● Changes in broadcasting in Canada, as recommended by the Fowler Committee on Broadcasting.

In the speech for the second or third time are:

● A free vote on the death penalty.

● Banking legislation and related proposals.

● Overhaul of the railways.

● A science council to "encourage further progress of scientific research."

● O Canada, as Canada's national anthem, with God Save The Queen as the royal anthem of Canada.

The election promises are:

● Catch insurance for fishermen and a Canadian dairy council.

● A proposal for buying, redeveloping and re-selling farms that are not viable economic units.

Cash advances for unthrashed grain when weather conditions prevent full harvesting.

Federal Authority Upheld

The new measures are:

● Massive aid to education.

● A single measure to authorize the major re-shaping of ministerial responsibilities envisaged by Prime Minister Pearson in last month's cabinet shakeup.

● An indication that the government, which has been criticized for its policy of co-operative federalism, may be digging in its heels before the demands of the provinces.

The throne speech declares:

"While respecting fully the responsibilities of the provinces, the government is equally resolved to maintain the constitutional responsibilities of the federal authority."

The government pointed up its manpower retraining programs and its war on poverty, but there was little in the speech that was new.

It avoided any mention at all of its policy on raising for old age pensioners, which is expected to be a major issue in the session and the subject of a non-confidence motion.

The Tories, in their election campaign, demanded a raise from $75 to $100 a month.

In their caucus, the Liberals have been wondering how to tackle the Tory assault when it comes.

If they have decided, it wasn't in Tuesday's throne speech.

The government will continue to work for the "effective co-ordination of measures to reduce poverty and increase security across Canada."

In this respect, the Canada Assistance Plan would be used to give assistance to individuals and families in need.

In education, the key new projected legislation, the government recognizes the need for expansion of institutions of higher education and providing "greater and more equitable opportunities for young Canadians to attend such institutions."

University Aid Coming

To achieve this, the government would submit to parliament a program of scholarships and bursaries for students taking higher education.

Amendments would be made to the Student Loans Act.

As a first step to meeting the acute financial difficulties of universities and colleges, parliament would be asked to approve a substantial increase in federal aid to education in the year 1966-67.

The Throne Speech did not mention the government's target date of July 1, 1967, for Medicare.

However, it is understood that the date still stands, despite slowness in the provinces to show where they stand on the federal offer to pay half the per capita cost.

The Throne Speech states:

Bank Act Extension

But it is understood that the government intends to extend the existing Bank Act, possibly for six months or more.

When the changes are introduced, they will be closer in line with the changes proposed by the Porter Royal Commission than the changes recommended in the last session by ex-finance minister Gordon.

The government will introduce a resolution to seek parliamentary approval for the Canada-U.S. auto agreement, which was also an election issue.

In the past, the government had argued that it was the type of agreement that didn't really require ratification by Parliament, but now it is requesting it.

The government promises new steps to develop international economic conditions and to strengthen the Canadian economy.

It promises that the government is moving to "ensure that our prosperity and growth continue."

The Throne Speech takes a rosy view of the future of the economy.

Our economic efficiency can be improved by concerted efforts to adapt and develop our institutions, both private and governmental, to our real needs."

Improvements in productivity would permit the economy to grow faster, higher standards of living and a better balance in international payments.

The speech also stressed the importance of retraining workers and making people who are unemployed and under-employed more productive.

Niagara Poses Problem

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP)—New York's two U.S. senators said Tuesday that the American Falls, beset by damaging rock slides in recent years, should not be allowed to deteriorate.

Senator Robert F. Kennedy, in a statement read for him, described the American Falls as a "unique resource that cannot be allowed to deteriorate."

The statement and one by Republican Senator Jacob Javits were read at a one-day public hearing called by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which is trying to determine what steps should be taken to preserve and enhance the scenic beauty of the 162-foot-high cataract on the U.S. side of the Niagara River.

Kennedy, a Democrat, said he had asked State Secretary Dean Rusk to initiate discussions with Canada to enable the International Joint Commission to join in an investigation of the falls' condition.

The Metropolitan Board of Health will seek greater autonomy under new terms of reference, the group decided Tuesday.

"The present constitution doesn't give the board complete autonomy," said Central Saanich Reeve R. Gordon Lee, re-elected chairman of the board at the first 1966 meeting.

He said dissatisfaction had also been expressed at unequal cost-sharing by member municipalities, Victoria, Oak Bay and Esquimalt now pay most of the board's expenses.

Reeve Lee reported there had been a suggestion by government spokesmen that the health board ought to place itself under the wing of the newly-created regional district which covers Greater Victoria.

The board endorsed his suggestion that it remain independent for the immediate future.

The board also was advised that the Plummer Bay mill burner would cease operation at the end of January.

Delay in construction of a wharf which will export mill waste resulted in the smoke nuisance continuing beyond the end of 1965.

Firemen Called

Firemen were called to a smoking oil barge around noon Tuesday as a precautionary measure.

A short-circuiting battery caused the smoke on the barge, which was moored at Victoria's industrial reserve.

Joint Fire Committee Chooses Delegates

Members of the joint fire committee for North Saanich and the village of Sidney have been appointed by the North Saanich reeve and the village chairman.

An agreement for establishment of a joint fire protection service for the two areas was approved Friday by the provincial cabinet.

North Saanich has three representatives on the committee and Sidney has two.

VILLAGE REFS
Sidney Chairman Arthur Freeman has appointed Commissioner John Bocher and Commissioner W. W. Gardner as the village representatives.

The fire chief and two members of the Volunteer Firemen's Association will be ex-officio members of the committee but will have no voting power.

The captain said "every man aboard got four days leave in England. They went down to the south of England and saw their wives and girl friends."

Saanich Committees Join Forces

Saanich Looking Out For Tolmie Lookout

Two Saanich committees will join in planning improvements to the Mount Tolmie lookout, a parks and recreation committee meeting decided Tuesday night.

Peninsula Council For Pool

Central Saanich is going to get its $30,000 communal swimming pool, peninsula council chairman Albert Vickers said Tuesday.

Council had earlier approved of the project in principle, but at last night's meeting voted 4 to 2 to accept the project, he said.

Coun. Margaret Bell and Coun. Charles Mallard voted against the pool, the chairman said.

He said council also agreed to have the pool heated if the cost of heating could be kept within the original $30,000 ceiling.

In the opinion of council the construction and maintenance of the swimming pool will mean a one-mill increase in taxes.

'Beaver' Project Starting

Work will start this week to convert a lowly ammunition lighter into an exact replica of the historic paddle steamer Beaver which is to play a leading role in B.C.'s centennial celebrations this year.

Already a dozen huge fir trees for the ship's masts and spars have been cut from the forest area of Royal Roads. They will be trimmed and brought to Esquimalt naval base where officer cadets of HMCS Venture will be given the "honor" of peeling the bark from the logs.

The ship's main mast is to be 55 feet high. Plans for the ship's construction, which is being done jointly by Maritime Command Pacific and the provincial government, are being coordinated by RCN Lieut. W. E. Rhodes, an expert on B.C.'s marine history.

The original ship's wheel, which has been in possession of the maritime museum for some time, will be installed to add authenticity to the model.

Run Resumes For Passengers

Pacific Great Eastern Railway passenger service from Vancouver to Prince George and return will be resumed today.

Service will be provided three days a week—Monday, Wednesday and Friday—from Vancouver to Prince George. The return service will be on alternate days—Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

The railway has arranged for Greyhound Lines of Canada to honor the return portion of tickets on the railway's off-service days.

The public works and the parks and recreation committees will submit a plan to the Capital Improvement District Commission suggesting better parking facilities and extension of the lookout's view to a full 360 degrees.

USE CEMENT TOP

Parks and recreation chairman Edward Lum suggested the cement top of the proposed reservoir be utilized in the plans for improving the lookout.

A water reservoir to be built on the east side of Mount Tolmie was proposed earlier by the public works committee.

The reservoir—to cost between $100,000 and $140,000—is needed to increase the water pressure in the Gordon Head area.

Coun. Edith Gunning, said the top of the reservoir would be suitable for some form of recreation, and suggested a tennis court could be built there.

RAMP STUDY

Last night's meeting also decided to have the lands and planning department study the feasibility of constructing boat-ramps in the municipality.

Reeve Hugh Curtis noted there were no ramps between Cattle Point and Central Saanich.

Celebrations Chairman: MacFayden

Victoria Celebrations Committee elected Ed MacFayden chairman at their first meeting for 1966 Tuesday.

At the meeting John Rafter was elected vice-president, and directors are Brian Wright, Alex Johnston, Robert Bullivant, John Dirom and Thomas Outerbridge.

Aldermen Geoffrey Edgell and Percy Frampton represent the City of Victoria on the committee. Coun. Ed Lum represents Saanich, Coun. J. D. Watts, Oak Bay, and Coun. Arthur Mebs, Esquimalt.

Mrs. Ethel Bishop is honorary treasurer.

Crash Kills Woman

DUNCAN — A middle-aged woman was killed about midnight Tuesday when her car was in collision with a lumber truck on Government Street here.

Police would not disclose her name. It appeared she was on her way to work at King's Daughters' Hospital. Eye-witnesses said her older-model car crossed the road into the path of the south-bound truck.

Boukon

Career Near End

Commodore A. G. Boukon, commander of HMCS Naden since 1961, retires early February after 33 years of naval service.

Commodore Boukon started his naval career in 1933 and was on active duty at the outbreak of the Second World War.

He served on destroyers and corvettes and was mentioned in dispatches while in command of HMCS Annapolis. While commanding HMCS St. Laurent he was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for outstanding service in the face of the enemy.

In 1947 he joined the regular force with the rank of commander and was appointed chief of staff to the flag officer Atlantic coast.

Pollution Samples Not Taken

Alberni Canal Off Limits

By MARY TAYLOR

PORT ALBERNI—Action of delegates to the annual convention of the Vancouver Island Game Affiliation of Fish and Game Clubs in Nanaimo in backing a Victoria resolution for more staff and authority for the Pollution Control Board, has been applauded by sportsmen in the Alberni Valley.

"Our local groups have been fighting for years for greater water pollution control," one sportsman said. "Our great problem is in getting sufficient facts and information to back up our laws. We are stumped by our lack of technical advice."

"We really need a marine biologist of our own. Provincial department of recreation and conservation biologists are most helpful, but are not in a position to take water samples in the Alberni Canal, our chief source of worry locally."

"The inlet comes under the heading of tidal waters and as a result is a federal problem."

Said another: "All you have to do is look at the water in the canal, and remember how clear it used to be, and you can tell the things polluted. But we can talk and scream and holler all we like. Positive facts and positive proof are almost impossible for us to get."

"We've wrestled with the problem for four years with no results."

"When the federal fisheries boat comes in, it seems the water gets cleared up rapidly. The company (Mac-Powell) claims to take daily samples. We have no way of proving them right or wrong unless we, too, have some way of taking and testing samples."

Chuck Plowright, an Alberni Valley delegate to the convention Sunday, said a biologist speaking at the meeting pointed out the great shortage of professional help available.

"Pollution control is just in its infancy according to him."

Mr. Plowright said, "Any young fellow going to this field could go right to the top."

"He also showed how many of the profitable byproducts of industry have been discovered by scientists trying for greater pollution control."

"We were told that within a year or 18 months, there will be no more hard detergents sold in the United States," Mr. Plowright said. "Already packages are being marketed bearing a little label that states No Hard Detergents. These are non-foaming, and do not make the hard sediment in water that has caused so much trouble."

Sportsmen also feel that everyone should be interested in pollution problems. Chamber of Commerce figures released at the Chamber's annual meeting showed tourism making astonishing progress in this area.

One of the chief reasons tourists come is for the fishing and hunting in these areas.

Anything that damages the recreational value of the area will damage its second greatest industry irreparably, sportsmen say.

"In the United States, they are having to spend $41,000,000,000 to clear Lake Erie of the effects of pollution," the Nanaimo convention was told.

Peterson at University of Victoria

'Bursaries Are Answer'

By GUY STANLEY

Bursaries, not the elimination of tuition fees, is the way to remove financial barriers from post-secondary education, B.C.'s Education and Labor Minister Leslie Peterson told University of Victoria students Tuesday.

He said he also hopes to see bursaries used to offset the universities from out of town.

At present the provincial government offers bursaries worth half tuition costs for first-class students, and a third for needy second-class students.

After a short talk, Mr. Peterson answered questions. Most were asked by members of students council.

"Have tuition fees reached a plateau?"

"The universities are autonomous and able to set the fee level where they wish. Personally I would hope there would be no increase in fees."

TAKE INTEREST

How would the government react to cancellation of the registration of from one-third to one-half of the students for non-payment of fees?

"I am not fearful of having to deal with that. If the non-payment was for financial reasons then we might take an interest in these cases."

UNEMPLOYMENT AID?

"At present, students at technical institutes can claim unemployment insurance and other benefits. Will university students soon be able to do this?"

"The bill is in the house. Changes in unemployment insurance are being announced; training allowances have been fully considered but results are not clear at the moment."

FEDERAL MATTER

"It's federal jurisdiction." In his speech, Mr. Peterson said that education ministers from all provinces including Quebec are pressing for increased federal help in financing education.

"Education is the key to future economic development," Mr. Peterson said.

considered but results are not clear at the moment.

"Any doubts about the importance of education in the economy should have been dispelled by the recent report of Canada's Economic Council."

He warned that the continued autonomy of universities should be considered when talking about government paying the whole cost.

"Government might set quotas," he said, "on the number and type of graduates, or admission requirements might become stiffer to protect the public purse."

GUARD AGAINST IT

"It's far-fetched at the moment but something to be guarded against."

"Having two levels of government (federal and provincial) helping to pay costs is some protection," he said.

Fee-Hike Solidarity May Be Cracking

The University of Victoria announced Tuesday that 799 students had failed to pay part or all of their second-term tuition fees.

The registrar's office reported that 697 students had withheld $56, the amount of last year's fee increase. Another 102 students owed more for spring tuition.

Saturday was the final deadline for payment, after which a $10 late fine was to be imposed. The student council this winter has led a campaign for temporary withholding of the fee increase as a protest against rising costs of higher education.

The council has asked students to pay the $56 on Jan. 27, the day the B.C. legislature opens.

The bursar's office sent a letter Tuesday to all students who had not paid all their fees. It offered help if there were financial problems, and added that the registrar's office would be notified if fees were not paid by Jan. 27.

Expulsion is the normal result of non-payment without excuse.

The student council issued a circular advising students who hadn't paid to write the bursar's office informing the administration that they would pay on Jan. 27.

The withholding of fees by 799 was taken in some quarters as indicating a weakening of solidarity among the students.

Previously, 51 per cent of the campus' 2,980 students had signed pledges promising to withhold the increase.

Anti-Obscenity Film Draws Opposing Fire

By IAN ARBORE

The film Perversion for Profit shown Tuesday night at a Monterey Elementary School PTA meeting was termed irresponsible by PTA executive member Mrs. Mary Evans, wife of the Victoria Unitarian minister.

The film was shown by the Section 150 Committee which seeks support to persuade the provincial government to set up an advisory council to enforce the criminal code on obscene literature.

CITIZENS ACT

Alberni and Ontario have such citizens' councils to advise the attorney-general on material they feel should not be distributed and sold. Prosecutions can be initiated on their recommendation.

Mrs. Evans said she would like "qualified people to comment on the psychological effects of obscene literature."

"My study of the problem leads me to believe people with sexual problems have them in early development—before being exposed to newstandards at all."

ANTI-SOCIAL

She felt such material might act as "dream material" allowing those who read such to get relief at an immature level, instead of taking out their emotional distortions in an anti-social way.

The narrator of the film had concluded that "sex-mad magazines are creating criminals faster than we can jail them."

CHICAGO GANGS

This statement was countered by Mr. James Mair, director of Sevenoaks Children's Treatment Centre.

"I have worked with gangs in Chicago and Montreal," said the social worker, "and not one person I have worked with has ever become criminal through reading obscene or pornographic literature."

PROTECT US

Mr. Mair said censorship, "the edge of the totalitarian state," was a much greater danger than the dangers "vigilante committee" would seek to protect us from.

The film concluded with the narrator intoning, "O God, deliver us Americans from evil."

"I feel the film ended on a very high level," said a PTA member.

MORAL DECAY

"If the Americans hadn't removed Bible reading from the schools, this moral decay might not have taken place," she said.

A male member of the audience thought that, indeed, the Bible did "display what men and women are really like."

Another man thought Easton's catalogue pretty revealing, too.

A faculty member of the University of Victoria asked why the Section 150 Committee had not accepted an invitation from the Institute of Victoria Librarians to send a panel member to the discussion on censorship last Wednesday in the Student Union Building.

"We are not a debating society," said Terence Sinclair, who as a member of the Committee had introduced the film.

Mr. Sinclair said the purpose of the government advisory council his group proposed was merely to remove from the newstandards "the most flagrant offenders."

Gagliardi Wows Students

By GUY STANLEY

B.C. Highways Minister P. A. Gagliardi left more than 100 University of Victoria students rolling in the aisles Monday, with homespun quips about resources, girl friends and broken promises.

"Our present (provincial) government has stated unequivocally that we are a Canada government first, and a B.C. government second," he said.

"Except where our natural resources are concerned. Anybody who comes out here to steal our resources, he's got to deal with me."

DUNCAN ROAD

On the Duncan-Lake Cowichan Highway:

"We've spent a lot of money on this highway. Maybe there are some university students here who still have to eat the dust on their roads."

"Man, if they saw what we'd done for you, they'd think they had the world by the tail on a downhill pull."

"Bless my soul," he said, "I look after more miles of highway (25,000) than anyone else in the free world."

On the provincial government taking over car insurance:

"I don't like socialism. Government should stay away from business."

B.C. BANK

What about the B.C. bank? "It will just be financing Quebec and B.C. on the same basis. Competition is the best thing in the world."

"If you're after a girl friend, you don't think much of her until some one else starts chasing her. That's competition."

He added that since Premier Bennett waived all interest in the bank, he's hoping it may go through at Ottawa this session.

BLOOD TESTS

Mr. Gagliardi called for compulsory breathalyzer and blood tests to deter the drinking driver.

"If I can save a life, let's save it. It's time the slaughter stopped."

ROSEB THREAT

"Do you think I'd take a drink and turn myself loose on the highway? I'm dangerous enough sober."

Mr. Gagliardi's visit was sponsored by the University of Victoria Activities Council.

Pick Pockets Pocket Prize

NAPLES (AP)—Every week for 12 years Francesco Ferrisano, a peanut vendor, has been betting on numbers 15 and 74 in Lotto, Italy's state-run numbers lottery. Last weekend his 20-lire (32-cent) bet paid off 50,000 lire ($80). But pickpockets got it all. He was so upset he jumped into the sea twice. Each time he was rescued.

Erratic Woman Driver Fined $400, Suspended

A woman drove a block down Douglas Street Monday night with her headlights off—and in the curb lane on the wrong side of the street.

Daphne Hay, 928 Bay, pleaded guilty in central magistrate's court Tuesday to impaired driving and was fined $400. She was also barred from driving anywhere in Canada for 18 months.

Prosecutor Peter Birkett said Miss Hay was driving south on Douglas at 7:45 p.m. She crossed from the centre lane to the northbound curb lane.

WRONG SIDE

She held this position for one block, Mr. Birkett said. Her headlights were out.

Five or six northbound cars had to cross to the wrong side to avoid being hit and two entered a service station driveway to dodge the car.

At the intersection of Chatham, Miss Hay's car skidded and finished up in the centre of the intersection.

Mr. Birkett said a policeman came up behind and stopped 75 feet away. Miss Hay then backed up and the policeman was forced to reverse 100 feet to avoid being hit.

The car then went down Chatham into Government and entered Pandora against a red light, court was told.

It was then parked near the Government Street liquor store, half on the sidewalk and half on the road, Mr. Birkett said.

REMOVED KEYS

An off-duty policeman called the city station and removed the keys from the car. A breathalyzer reading of .17 was taken, court was told.

Magistrate William Ostler said to Miss Hay: "Does this recital shock you this morning?"

"Yes," was the reply.

Magistrate Ostler: "The increase in serious impaired driving offences is so alarming that it seems to me that nothing short of jail sentences is going to have any effect."

A breaking and entering charge against convicted murderer David Leonard Robinson was withdrawn by the Crown.

The charge alleged that Robinson broke into a house at 344A Old Island Highway May 3, 1965.

It was while Robinson was being held on this charge that he was charged with murdering Susan Freschi near her View Royal home May 11.

Robinson pleaded guilty to non-capital murder last month and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Mr. Birkett said he was asking for permission to withdraw the break-in charge on instructions of the attorney-general's office.

A charge of recording bets was quashed by Magistrate Ostler before the Crown's first witness had testified.

This followed an application from defence counsel Desmond Owen-Flood that the charge against Walter Chane, 349 Cook, was a nullity.

TWO OFFENCES

Mr. Owen-Flood said the charge included two offences.

"...namely that he did unlawfully use or knowingly allow a place under his control to be used for recording bets."

Mr. Owen-Flood claimed the two were entirely separate offences.

"One is active, the other is passive, so to speak," Mr. Owen-Flood said.

After a short adjournment, Magistrate Ostler allowed the motion and quashed the charge.

A habitual criminal hearing against John Stephen Lawrence Smith was adjourned to Feb. 22 for continuation.

The hearing, which is before Magistrate J. A. Hyers, was due to continue Tuesday but a transcript of the earlier evidence was not available.

An attempt by the Crown to introduce rebuttal evidence against Kenneth Roy was blocked by Magistrate Ostler.

Roy, 2501 Wark, has pleaded not guilty to assaulting Constable James Ramsey Nov. 27 by striking him over the head with his crutch or crutches.

REBUTTAL

After the defence introduced its last witness, prosecutor Peter Birkett called Sgt. John Rickerby to the stand to give rebuttal evidence.

Mr. Birkett said he would attempt to get before the court conversation Sgt. Rickerby had with Roy on the way to the police station.

CROWN CLOSED

Defence counsel Digby Kier objected, saying that the Crown had closed its case.

Magistrate Ostler upheld the objection. He said the Crown could and should have introduced Sgt. Rickerby's evidence earlier.

Magistrate Ostler reserved judgment to Jan. 26.

The Bricklayers' Union dance host Alan Curtis an extra $50 fine after he was found guilty of assaulting Ingham Hotel beer parlor manager Thomas Higgins. Curtis, address unavailable, had pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Higgins told court a fight had started during the union's dance at the hotel and he saw Curtis fighting with another man.

THREW PUNCH

He said he asked Curtis to take it easy, told him who he was and then was struck in the right eye and on the side of the head.

Curtis said someone pulled him around and he threw a punch.

A man seen in a city beer parlor Saturday night when he had only 30 cents in his pocket was jailed for two months for vagrancy.

James Schultz, no fixed address, had pleaded not guilty.

Det. Constable Edward James said Schultz said he was not working and gave two different addresses.

STOLEN GOODS

Schultz had been seen numerous times in the company of known criminals, Constable James said.

He had a record for possession of stolen goods and uttering a forgery.

Seatbelts Save Family

A woman and her three small children escaped serious injury when their car overturned at Haultain and Foul Bay around noon Tuesday.

Mrs. Ruth Donaldson, 1156

Timber Lane, and two of her children were treated at Royal Jubilee Hospital for minor injuries.

Oak Bay police said the Donaldsons were strapped into their car.

They were involved in a collision with a car driven by William Jones, 2210 Belmont.

Firemen were called to haul away gasoline spilled on the road.

Canada-Wide Contingent For Rose Bowl Parade?

Pleased with the results of its entry to enter a Canada-wide contingent in the Tournament of Roses parade in the next parade.

In California, Premier Bennett B.C.'s entry was the international Tuesday he would ask for a trophy in the parade at Prime Minister Lester Pearson's parade on New Year's Day.

'Cop Lover'

Offers of Help Given Grocer

NEW YORK (AP)—Offers of help began pouring in Monday for a 56-year-old Puerto Rican grocer who said he was shunned because he helped a white policeman under attack by a Negro mob.

Enrique Negron, lost his business in the Bronx. He said neighbors called him "cop lover" and "Nigger hater." His savings dwindled to $300.

Newspaper stories about his plight aroused the concern of New Yorkers.

Negron said he has been offered jobs by the Staten Island ferry and Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. A former seaman, he said he would probably accept an offer from the National Maritime Union to return to sea.

Meantime, the Small Business

Administration said it was willing to offer Negron a $15,000 loan with up to 15 years to pay. The federal agency said Negron would not have to put up collateral because his character is "unquestionable."

"Thank God and everybody," Negron said Monday night. "Now at least I have some hope."

Rebels Ambush Laotian Troops

VIENTIANE, Laos (Reuters)—Pathet Lao troops, apparently tipped off about a government clearing operation in the Province of Saravane last week, ambushed the government troops killing 20 and wounding several others, military sources said.

Bennett Too Busy

Premier Bennett says he has given no consideration to the holding of bye-elections in Yale or North Okanagan because he has been too busy preparing for the opening of the legislature.

"I can't engage in discussions with any citizens when the matter is before the courts," he said Tuesday.

Redistribution Bomb Not Yet Dropped

A report which is expected to stir a controversy about provincial redistribution has not yet been received by the government, Premier Bennett said Tuesday.

The report which is being prepared by Dr. Henry F.

Angus, retired chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, will be made public "in the legislature forthwith" of its receipt, the premier said.

"I have no information on the report, either directly or indirectly," he added.

Parakeets Hungry After TV

PORTLAND (AP)—Dogs may become snappish if exposed to too much television, the Oregon State Board of Health cautioned Monday in its weekly bulletin.

It said it was relaying the findings of a West German study in saying that one hour a day of television watching was plenty for a dog.

The study showed that dogs watching three to four hours daily suffered loss of appetite.

And parakeets, it said, came down with a fever after watching for five hours a day.

A spokesman for the department said the study was reported in a serious journal of veterinary medicine.

Motion Today

Flashlight Fells Suspect

No evidence was offered in County Court Tuesday on behalf of Gary Watt who has pleaded not guilty to attempting to breaking into the Polynesian Restaurant, 914 Esquimalt, on Aug. 28, 1965.

Defence counsel Brian Smith will place a motion before the court today.

The court was told how the police saw two men behind the restaurant in the early hours of Aug. 28.

DOWN ALLEY

One man was seen crouched near a door, and the other, identified by the police as the defendant, was further down the alley.

The Crown witnesses agreed the lighting was bad at the time.

The police said the men ran away when approached. One escaped but the defendant was brought down by a flashlight thrown by a policeman.

18 Passengers

Bandits Rob Subway

CHICAGO (UPI)—Four gun-packing bandits, one carrying a "Junior Posse" badge and another decked out in a buckskin jacket, held 18 passengers into the rear of a moving subway-elevated train Tuesday and stripped them of money and valuables.

Police captured four youths hiding in an all-night service station minutes after the bandits fled from the train at an elevated stop. They said the four admitted staging the ill-fated, small-scale version of the "great train robbery."

Six victims identified the holdup men.

THREE MINUTES

Victims said the robbery was carried out in less than three minutes between the time the Englewood-Howard Street train left its last northbound underground station at North and Clybourn Avenues and reached its first elevated stop at Fullerton Avenue.

Three of the robbers herded the passengers to the rear of the rear car, prodding daring victims to awaken them to the fact they were being robbed and to get them moving.

LOOKED INTO GUN

"I looked right up into the barrel of a gun," one victim told police. "Then I saw that everyone else was standing in the back of the car, so I moved too."

Other passengers, the conductor and the motorman farther forward in the four-car Chicago Transit Authority train were unaware of what was happening.

WAVED GOODBYE

At the elevated stop, the bandits winked and waved to their victims and leaped out to the platform. The bandit in Buffalo Bill garb shouted:

"Keep your heads inside or we'll blow them off."

As the bandits fled down the stairs to the street, the passengers notified the conductor and motorman. The motorman notified his dispatcher by two-way radio-phone and police were at the scene within minutes.

Anglers Meet

RCN Anglers' Association will hold its annual meeting at 8 p.m., Friday, in the Dockyard Recreational Association Hall. Trophies and crests will be awarded.

Centennial Medallion

Gold-Plated Medals Sell Like Hot Cakes

Those big gold centennial medallions which you see around town are like wooden nickels, except they cost a lot more.

They are being sold for 50 cents each and they are not negotiable yet they're going like hot cakes.

Provincial centennial chairman L. J. Wallace said Tuesday that more than 50,000 of the coin-like souvenirs had been distributed during the first three weeks they were on sale.

The low faces of the gold-plated, brass alloy medallions commemorate the centenaries of the union of B.C. in 1866 and of Canadian Confederation in 1867.

The medallions are selling for 50 cents apiece through the 380

centennial committees throughout the province, and each one sold brings a 20-cent profit which the local centennial group can use for its own projects and events.

Mr. Wallace said 100,000 of the medallions were struck for the promotion by a firm in Vancouver and that they were moving so fast that "we most likely will be missing more."

China Assails
U.S. Bombing

PEKING (Reuters)—China has accused the U.S. of "wantonly" bombing Central and Lower Laos and of spreading toxic chemicals in the northern part of the country. The foreign affairs ministry said "intensified bombings" of Laos constituted an important step by the U.S. in spreading the Viet Nam war to the whole of Indo China.

IT BEATS ME

By Jim Tang

When, earlier this month, a report reached here that a meeting was being held to protest the possibility that commercial fishing of herring would be permitted in Saanich Inlet the first reaction was complete disbelief. This became amazement when it was further discovered that the possibility stemmed from the fact that three Saanich Inlet boathouse operators had applied for the right to take bait herring from the Inlet by means of dip nets.

That anyone, much less anyone to whom Saanich Inlet has meant so much as a sports-fishing preserve, would be willing to open it up to commercial fishing of any sort or of any volume was something that is hard to believe. In fact, it is almost unthinkable.

Sports fishermen have far too few fishing areas they can call their own, and Saanich Inlet is one of the finest. Not necessarily because it is an exceptionally-productive area but because it provides year-round fishing in at least fairly-well sheltered waters and has year by year become increasingly important to a fast-growing area which in a few years will number at least 200,000 citizens.

Saanich Inlet is nothing less than an exceptional marine playground on which millions of hours of recreation have been spent by tens of thousands of citizens. This city and its surrounding area is indeed blessed by having this recreational facility so close at hand, and by having it closed to everything but recreation. That anyone would take a chance on losing this is impossible to understand.

And, color it any way anyone may try, this was what was done when application was made to the fisheries department to have regulations "relaxed" to allow a "limited" bait herring fishery in Saanich Inlet. That would be the wedge, and the chances are better than excellent that it wouldn't be long before there would be a relaxation of the limited.

That was immediately evident. The application was to permit the use of dip nets to take bait herring. This, apparently, is not authorized in fisheries regulations — and this is what came out from the Department of Fisheries when it advised interested parties of the supplementary proposed change to British Columbia fisheries regulations:

"It is suggested that a bait operation similar to that permitted in Howe Sound be allowed, i.e. herring seines and drag seines not exceeding 25 fathoms in length and one hundred and fifty meshes in vertical length."

So, out of the idea that it would be very helpful, not to say profitable, to be able to net bait herring in Saanich Inlet came the immediate possibility of drag seines. And it would go on from there — that you can be sure.

Arguments presented by proponents are about as full of holes as the parking lot at the Victoria Curling Club.

One is quoted as saying that permission to commercially take bait herring from Saanich Inlet "is now necessary to meet competition from new marina complexes."

Another statement is that "live bait would open up new ways of taking salmon on light tackle. We need live bait and bottom fishing to conserve salmon."

And, finally, as if to prove that there is no intention of anything that might do lasting harm, it was suggested that those licensed to net Saanich Inlet herring be limited to a catch of 1,000 pounds and that this "year-round industry" be for the exclusive use of Saanich Inlet sports fishermen.

Examine them closely and you are actually arguments against and not for the opening of Saanich Inlet to its first commercial fishing.

Just how the right to commercially fish bait herring on the Inlet would combat the competition from new marina complexes can only be seen one way — that profits from the sale of said herring would help offset whatever loss of business these new complexes have caused.

There can be no little doubt but that the proposal to risk Saanich Inlet's non-commercial sanctity in the first place was made with extra profits in mind. And this sort of makes the suggestion that a limit of 1,000 pounds per licensee — meant, we understand, to qualify only by owning Saanich Inlet shoreline rights — all but ridiculous.

There couldn't be much of a profit to anyone limited to 1,000 pounds of herring. It's hardly enough to keep a busy boathouse in bait for more than a few weeks and certainly not enough for any "year-round industry." It surely tends to create the suspicion that it was a figure set to try and get something started — the wedge mentioned earlier.

I'll leave it up to you to figure out just how live bait from Saanich Inlet would help "conserve salmon" while I try to figure out how the fisheries department will police that 1,000-pound figure and how the boathouse operators will police things so that Saanich Inlet bait will be used only by Saanich Inlet sports fishermen.

Even more important, I'll try and figure out why anyone with such a stake in Saanich Inlet would take a chance on bringing in any form of commercial fishing. It's hard to get by that old bromide that Grandma used when we got to playing both ends against the middle — you can't have your cake and eat it, too.

Half-Way Leaders Get Extra Payday

For Bobby Hull, Glenn Hall and Norm Ullman, the National Hockey League has started paying bonuses already, despite the fact that the season is barely half over.

Hornets Open Defence Of Rugby Cup

Mount View Hornets start out in defence of their Howard Russell Cup city high school rugby title today, visiting Oak Bay at Carnarvon Park in one of two league openers.

In the other game, Mt. Douglas plays at Claremont. Vic High, which lost to Mount View in last year's final, draws a bye this week.

The Hornets have won the cup for two of the last three years, beating Oak Bay in 1963 and the Vics last year. At the end of the league schedule, second and third teams play off for the right to meet the first-place team for the cup.

Famed Czech folk dancers add to entertainment

Trotters Are Show Business And It's Not All Basketball

Part of the secret of Al Sapperstein's success with Harlem Globetrotters is that he always mixes top-flight entertainment with top-notch basketball. This year, the 40th anniversary of the Trotters, is no exception. When the show opens Wednesday at 8 at Memorial Arena, it will be like the days of vaudeville revisited. In addition to the Trotters, Sapperstein will present the Czechoslovakian State Folk Dance Troupe, and Eva Bosakova, three-time world gymnast champion and Olympic Games gold medal winner in 1960. The Czechoslovakian troupe, rated among the world's best, have appeared on the Ed Sullivan show, singing, dancing and playing native musical instruments. The dancers and Miss Bosakova open the show at 8 with a half-hour performance, and will appear for another 30 minutes at half-time of the game between the Trotters and New York Nationals.

Trotters themselves are led by Bob Hall, the celebrated Showboat, who is playing his 16th season with the club. The Trotters call him the greatest ball-handler in the game. Then there is J. C. Gipson, another favorite here, and the veteran Murphy Summons and Dave Gains, who perform the trick dribbling that is a traditional part of the Trotter show.

BREK AROUND
In the 40 years since Sapperstein started the Trotters with five Negro players and himself, the club has played in 87 countries and Sapperstein himself has become the world's champion commercial traveller, logging 5,000,000 air miles.

That first team was known as the Savoy Big Five, and they operated out of a station wagon. The word was that they played any town with a population of one, and if the population was two, Abe booked a double-header.

Sapperstein, who is not given to superlatives, has called the entertainment unit coming to Victoria "the greatest ever to travel with the Trotters."

And, of course, the basketball will be great, too. Over 40 years, it always has been.

Lions Get New Claws

B.C. Lions certainly intend to have a competitive training camp when they start preparing for the 1966 Canadian Football League season at Courtenay next July.

The dethroned Canadian champions are continuing to add to their roster in an all-out effort to get back in the throne-room they occupied in 1964.

COULD BE NET
Yesterday, they announced the signing of Mel Profit, former All-America end from the University of California at Los Angeles.

Profit, 24 years old, six feet five and a half inches tall and 230 pounds, has played with both the Los Angeles Rams and Pittsburgh Steelers of the National Football League since leaving UCLA and could be the light end the Lions have been seeking.

His competition will come from Len Frickech, 230-pound former Oregon State end signed last month.

MOUNTING UP
In addition to Profit and Frickech the Lions have announced the signing of imports Wayne Foster, All-America tackle from Washington State University, and Ron Heiler, former University of Southern California halfback who was a late out from Green Bay Packers last year.

They have also signed two Canadians who played four years of college football in the United States—tackle Mike Webster of Notre Dame and linebacker with Alec Merriman

This is the big week for planning in the outdoors field. Vancouver Island Affiliated Fish and Game Association held its annual meeting in Nanaimo Sunday. Victoria Fish and Game held its annual meeting Monday. Victoria-Saanich Inlet Anglers' Association meeting is Thursday. RCN Anglers' annual meeting is Friday and on Saturday VSIAA will hold a big banquet and dance.

Victoria Fish and Game Club members Monday went on record to ask the provincial game authorities to stop antlerless deer shooting on Vancouver Island this year on a one-year trial basis.

At Nanaimo, Affiliated delegates voted to ask for a closed season on the shooting of hen pheasants on Vancouver Island. Both meetings were refreshing because of the enthusiasm that came out of them.

Elections for office in the Victoria Fish and Game Club were keenly contested, except for the president's chair, for which Tom Zaccarelli was unanimously re-elected.

Dennis Hagar was named honorary president. Owen Lohr was elected vice-president in a five-way election and Bill James was elected first director out of a slate of four. At Playfair continues as secretary; Arthur Hillside as secretary and Roy Smith as recording secretary.

Directors are Robert Kennedy, Ray McDougall, Mel Lohr, Stan Smith, Doug Turner, Robert Kirk, Angus McGrover, Chet Preston, Howard English, Vera Paillier, Konrad Samer, Les Longland, Alex Onischuck, Brian Adams, David Evans and Howard Zaccarelli.

Members voted a life membership to John Olson in appreciation for past club services.

Howard English was awarded a trophy for his work in the conservation of salmon. A special award was made to Roy Smith for his work in designing a new membership card. Owen Lohr was named member of the year for his work as maintenance supervisor of the clubhouse.

The VIAFGA voted to change its name to Vancouver Island Wildlife Association, to fall in line with the B.C. Federation of change to B.C. Wildlife Federation.

Ed Mankelov of Chemainus was elected president of the Vancouver Island Wildlife Association. Bob Pederson of Nanaimo is past president. John McKeever of Parksville is first vice-president; Brian Roberts of Victoria second vice-president, and directors are Bill Moncrieff of Cumberland and Arnie Williams of Duncan.

Delegates voted to ask for legislation to control the taking of wild oysters from Crown foreshores by commercial interests. It was charged that commercial oyster companies go onto crown beaches and remove oysters by scowloads and truckloads.

The wildlife group is going to support other fish and game groups in mounting a full scale attack on pollution of rivers, lakes and oceans.

The VSIAA annual meeting will be held in the Newstead Hall, 734 Fort Street at 8 p.m. Thursday with discussion of derbies and presentation of trophies scheduled, as well as election of officers and other matters concerning conservation of salmon and herring stocks and other club activities.

The big dance and banquet, designed to breathe new life into the VSIAA, will be held Saturday at the Ingraham Hotel with tickets at $2.50 each and obtainable from directors, Stan Williams Hunting and Fishing, Ben Hill Sporting Goods, Gordon's Sporting Goods, Hall's Boathouse, Anglers' Anchorage Marina and Brentwood Boathouse.

The RCN Anglers' general meeting will be Friday 8 p.m. in the Dockyard Recreational Hall, just outside main gates of Naden.

Main business will be discussion of a proposed new derby system which would mean three one-day derbies for coho, trout and spring salmon. There will be presentation of prizes, trophies and crests. Members and non-members are invited to attend.

Westfall

Chiefs Bolstered By Big Newcomer

Victoria Haida Chiefs think they've finally succeeded in their long search for a big man around whom to build their senior men's basketball team. Yesterday they got clearance from the B.C. Basketball Association to use Glenn Westfall, a 6'4", 217-pounder from Seattle.

Westfall, who gets out of the U.S. Navy Reserve in August, will take up residence here then. In the meantime he will commute for games, and he'll be here Saturday night when Chiefs play Vancouver Ex-Burg at 9:15 at Central Junior High School.

First Entry For "500" Lists Foster

INDIANAPOLIS (AP)—Billy Foster of Victoria, B.C., who holds the Indianapolis Motor Speedway record for a four cylinder car, was named as driver on the first entry for the 50th 500-mile race, on May 30.

Jim Robbins Co., Royal Oak, Mich., picked him to drive, a new rear-engine car with a Ford racing engine. Rolls Voldsted of Ore., designed the car and will be chief mechanic.

Foster, 28, qualified his Offenhauser last year at 158.4 m.p.h., a record for the breed, and was running in 11th place at 200 miles when a water main broke.

Russian Propaganda, That Is

Touring Teams Great for Propaganda

MOSCOW (CP) — The mass circulation newspaper Soviet Sport says the behavior of Sherbrooke Beavers, Canadian senior hockey champions, during an exhibition hockey game here Sunday "called forth the deep and just indignation of the audience."

The commentary illustrates the problem Canadian hockey teams are up against when they play in the Soviet Union.

Sunday's game, which the Beavers lost 6-5 to Moscow Spartak, was relatively tame by Canadian standards. But the Allan Cup champions were constantly jeered by the crowd of 10,000 in the Moscow Sports Palace for what the customers considered unsportsmanlike conduct.

The playing tactics of visiting Canadian teams, although they would seldom raise a stir at home, are seized upon eagerly here to present Canada in a bad light.

The alleged rough-house behavior of the Canadian hockey players ties in with the image of the Western world, particularly North America, which Soviet propaganda frequently tries to project—unruly and unstable.

Diplomatic concern over possible damage to national prestige was reflected in a special appeal for restraint made by Canadian Ambassador Robert Ford to Sherbrooke team representatives Friday. The appeal followed a game in Kalinin Thursday which the Canadians lost 15-4. A series of brief brawls enlivened the game.

Diplomatic sources in Ottawa said Tuesday that Ford acted within his field of responsibility in advocating more sportsmanlike conduct by the Canadian team. The external affairs department said Ottawa had not sent specific instructions to Ford on the matter.

The final two games of the Beavers' three in Russia were cleanly played. Canada lost the middle game 3-1.

The Pacific Coast Soccer League, idled since mid-December by weather conditions, resumes play this weekend, but Victoria United fans will have to wait another week to see their club in action here.

United plays this weekend all right, but in Vancouver. The match is on Sunday against Columbus at Callister Park. Saturday's action on the mainland sees Firefighters against Burnaby Villa and UBC Thunderbirds against New Westminster Royals.

Halas Proves His Point

CHICAGO (AP) — Owner-coach George Halas of Chicago Bears Tuesday dropped his lawsuit after opening remarks by Judge Cornelius Harrington, who said he found Allen's contract with the National Football League Bears extending through two more years was valid and binding.

The case had been continued from last Wednesday when the Bears sought an injunction restraining Allen from taking the Ram job which he agreed to accept Jan. 10.

Halas, disregarding objections by his own and Allen's attorneys, took the witness stand and said: "Your Honor, I'm most pleased with your decision upholding the validity of the contract. Your important ruling will uphold the integrity between National Football League clubs and sanctity of contracts."

"Validity was the issue here and will prevent the breakdown of organized football and all sports."

"George Allen was a minor issue here. The validity of the contract was the real issue. Now I want to say, I am dropping the suit."

The European trip was good," Bergeron said. "We received a good reception in Stockholm, Prague and East Berlin, but in Moscow, while we had good hockey, the atmosphere was not the same."

The Beavers, who won the Ahearne Cup in Sweden last month, travelled to East Germany, Czechoslovakia and Russia on an exhibition tour, following the Stockholm matches.

"The Canadian ambassador never mentioned rough play to us during our Friday visit, after the Kalinin game," Bergeron said.

Georges Roy, Beavers' playing-coach and star defenceman, said his club had played rough hockey against the Russian army team at Kalinin, but that the Soviet team "played just as rough and the referees didn't know hockey."

No Chastisement

MONTREAL (CP) — Canada's touring Allan Cup champions—Sherbrooke Beavers—flew in from Europe Tuesday with club officials and players both denying they had been chastised by Canada's ambassador in Moscow for alleged misconduct and rough play during their three-game Russian tour.

Raymond Bergeron, Beavers' president, said the subject had never been broached during a Friday visit with Canadian Ambassador Robert Ford.

When Smith Goes . . .

LONDON (Reuters) — Prime Minister Wilson outlined Tuesday night British plans for Rhodesia—once Ian Smith's white-minority regime has abandoned its seizure of power in the central African colony—at a two-hour meeting with Rhodesia's chief justice, Sir Hugh Beadle, government sources said.

Beadle, who flew unexpectedly to London from Salisbury earlier in the day, played an important behind-the-scenes conciliatory role before Smith seized independence from Britain Nov. 11.

But the sources ruled out any go-between role resulting from Beadle's London visit. They said the British government has no evidence that Smith wants to negotiate with Britain—except on his own independence terms, which are unacceptable to Wilson.

Beadle, expected to stay here for a few days, will discuss with British ministers various key economic and constitutional aspects of the independence crisis. Commonwealth Secretary Arthur Bottomley would have reviewed these questions with the governor, Sir Humphrey Gibbs, had he gone to Salisbury last week.

As Beadle opened his talks with Wilson and the Commonwealth secretary, the British government announced that a four-man military mission, led by Aden-based Maj.-Gen. John Willoughby, will fly to Zambia—Rhodesia's northern neighbor—today for talks with President Kenneth Kaunda's government.

EXPLORATORY
Willoughby will discuss future arrangements for British forces in Zambia, a squadron of RAF Javelin jet all-weather fighters and a unit of the RAF Regiment.

The sources said that his mission does not mean agreement has been reached between London and Lusaka to station British ground troops in Zambia—but Willoughby could explore this possibility.

Wilson has ruled out force to topple Smith's regime, but has reserved his position about British forces being needed to restore law and order in certain circumstances.

Captain Veres Tells Society

Canada Needs Fleet Of Merchant Ships

Canada needs a deeper merchant fleet, Capt. George Veres told the Victoria branch of the World Ship Society Monday night.

The president of McKay-Cormack Ltd. shipyard was addressing the annual banquet meeting of the U.K.-based society.

ITS PRUDENT
"From an ordinary, prudent business point of view," the captain said, "Canada requires a merchant marine so that she could not have to rely completely on others to carry her cargoes."

It is a matter of national and international security, he said.

Fry's Venus Observed

City Given Theatre Milestone

By E. D. WARD HARRIS

In an age where imitation serves as a substitute for creation and mediocrity as a standard for excellence, the theatre has produced some notable exceptions to the shoddy rule. And of these Christopher Fry is in the front rank.

A Fry play should always be an event, and Campus Players' presentation of Venus Observed, which Tuesday night opened a two-week run at the Phoenix Theatre, is certainly a milestone in Victoria theatre.

For this, honors must go to Gil Bunch who directed.

'NATURALISTIC'

Venus Observed was commissioned by Sir Laurence Olivier, who played the lead in the original 1950 London production, the role subsequently played by Rex Harrison on Broadway.

Olivier and Harrison, with Fry's assent, staged their productions "naturalistically," allowing the dialogue to speak for itself and the actors to move in normal surroundings.

RADICAL CHANGES

He has made radical changes. Three acts become two, with two delightful, wordless scene changes made in full view of the audience by cast members.

To take these and other liberties requires courage, but to bring it off—when can be the sole justification—demands skill.

By and large, Mr. Bunch has brought it off.

The real weight of a Christopher Fry play, like that of an iceberg, lies beneath the surface.

MISS IMPACT

If you go to the Phoenix Theatre without reading the play you will get lots of laughs, but that is all. You will certainly miss the full impact of Fry's remarkable power of word imagery, and possibly the point of the play into the bargain.

The crudest and most undisciplined description of Venus Observed is to say that it is a comedy concerning a father and son who fall in love with the same woman.

The central character is the Duke of Altair who has enjoyed three mistresses during the summer of his years. As the play opens we find the ageing duke deciding to stop philandering to marry one of them.

A FAMOUS PLAYERS THEATRE

He invites the women to his observatory to observe an eclipse of the sun, and asks his son to choose his stepmother.

The unexpected arrival from America of his agent's young daughter, Perpetua—the eternal Venus—upsets the apple cart and the still virile and charming duke immediately sets his coronet at her. So does his son.

This is, of course, a gross over-simplification. If it were not it would merely be an ordinary situation comedy dressed in extraordinary language. To ensure that it is not is the task of director and cast.

To Mr. Bunch must go full credit for excellent grouping, maximum use of lighting and the air of tension and spaciousness he engenders by superb movements within the sparse, effective settings.

But in taking credit, Mr. Bunch must also accept responsibility for faults.

In seeking to emphasize certain words and phrases, some of the cast, notably Perpetua, tend to hurry words preceding the emphasis, and much is lost.

Carl Hare gives a fine performance—as the duke. He speaks Fry's language as if it were his own, with obvious understanding. A performance to be savored.

John Getgood, as Rebeck, the duke's agent, is magnificent. He is by far the outstanding performance. He is so in character that it would be presumptuous to fault him.

Jennifer Chaster, Gloria Peyton and Mary Getgood handled the roles of the ex-mistresses with understanding.

Gudrun Langkilde-Laesens (Perpetua) moved well, and with spontaneity, but her diction was frequently faulty. She needs to open her mouth more.

Bruce Sharp (the duke's son) gave a convincing performance, as did Robert Orr and Bert Williams, as retainers.

The faults are mostly minor and can be rectified, but even with them this was a theatrical experience I wouldn't have missed for anything.

15 DAYS LATE
"Can you imagine watching a Thanksgiving show 17 or 18 days late?" she asked.

These are the minus sides of the King family show. But there are numerous pluses.

"We started out to entertain," Yvonne said, "and then the mail started coming in. Apparently people got a feeling of security—or togetherness—from watching all of us."

LETTERS OF PROTEST
"When people learned the show was to be cancelled, the letters of protest started coming in."

"Evidently, we did more than entertain. We seemed to reach the people in a special way. I think our theme song, Love at Home, sum it up."

Apparently, there is love for the King family not only "at home" but in thousands of homes across the country—even if ABC won't admit it.

City Given Theatre Milestone

By E. D. WARD HARRIS

In an age where imitation serves as a substitute for creation and mediocrity as a standard for excellence, the theatre has produced some notable exceptions to the shoddy rule. And of these Christopher Fry is in the front rank.

A Fry play should always be an event, and Campus Players' presentation of Venus Observed, which Tuesday night opened a two-week run at the Phoenix Theatre, is certainly a milestone in Victoria theatre.

For this, honors must go to Gil Bunch who directed.

'NATURALISTIC'

Venus Observed was commissioned by Sir Laurence Olivier, who played the lead in the original 1950 London production, the role subsequently played by Rex Harrison on Broadway.

Olivier and Harrison, with Fry's assent, staged their productions "naturalistically," allowing the dialogue to speak for itself and the actors to move in normal surroundings.

RADICAL CHANGES

He has made radical changes. Three acts become two, with two delightful, wordless scene changes made in full view of the audience by cast members.

To take these and other liberties requires courage, but to bring it off—when can be the sole justification—demands skill.

By and large, Mr. Bunch has brought it off.

MISS IMPACT

If you go to the Phoenix Theatre without reading the play you will get lots of laughs, but that is all. You will certainly miss the full impact of Fry's remarkable power of word imagery, and possibly the point of the play into the bargain.

The crudest and most undisciplined description of Venus Observed is to say that it is a comedy concerning a father and son who fall in love with the same woman.

The central character is the Duke of Altair who has enjoyed three mistresses during the summer of his years. As the play opens we find the ageing duke deciding to stop philandering to marry one of them.

Night Club, Theatre Bookings To Keep King Family Busy

LOS ANGELES (LAT)—The King family could be singing the blues now that their weekly show has been dropped by ABC. But they're not. Instead, their theme song seems to be, "we ain't down yet!" And indeed, they "ain't." Their year's exposure on network television has paid off handsomely in the form of bookings in theatres, night clubs and on other TV shows.

DUE IN LAS VEGAS
The 36 members of the King Clan opened a week's engagement here Monday night. Immediately after, they are due in Las Vegas to play the Sahara.

LETTERS OF PROTEST
"When people learned the show was to be cancelled, the letters of protest started coming in."

"Evidently, we did more than entertain. We seemed to reach the people in a special way. I think our theme song, Love at Home, sum it up."

Apparently, there is love for the King family not only "at home" but in thousands of homes across the country—even if ABC won't admit it.

15 DAYS LATE
"Can you imagine watching a Thanksgiving show 17 or 18 days late?" she asked.

These are the minus sides of the King family show. But there are numerous pluses.

"We started out to entertain," Yvonne said, "and then the mail started coming in. Apparently people got a feeling of security—or togetherness—from watching all of us."

Russell peeks at mother wrapping gift coins

Big Year For The Horse

By DON GAIN

The little Chinese boy peeked out from behind a chair as his mother wrapped coins in red paper in preparation for the start of the year 4664, the Year of the Horse, which begins Friday.

Russell Eng, 4½, of 406 Treebank, was thinking of all the little red paper parcels — called Li See — he will get this Chinese New Year.

Li See means good luck, and is given to all good children at this time of year.

"We looked forward to it all year when we were children," said Bessie Tang, 2624 Douglas, who was preparing special dishes for the celebration.

Vivian Eng, Russell's mother, had dressed him in a traditional Chinese cap and jacket which the boy's grandfather had brought him from a recent trip to Hong Kong.

"Each year has been given the name of an animal," explained Bessie's husband, Jack.

"Time in ancient China is reckoned in cycles of 60-year periods. The names of 12 animals are combined with one of the five celestial elements called stems — wood, fire, earth, metal and water.

"This is the Year of the Horse, combined with wood." It's a time for family get-togethers, the Tangs explained, particularly on New Year's Eve, which will be Thursday.

There are firecrackers and a holy dish called Jie. Joss sticks are lit and families pray for good will, good luck and blessings from the gods for another year.

Friday — New Year's Day — will be the day of visiting friends and exchanging gifts, usually fruit or sweet pastries. The children, decked out in new clothes, receive special sweets and treats like sugar cane and candied fruits, and get their red-wrapped Li See.

Tea is always served first as soon as guests appear, as a binder of friendship.

All debts must be paid before the new year begins, and the house must be cleaned from top to bottom. Chinese water lilies are the symbolic flower of the season, each bud of the pure white flower being a clean page, a brand new sign of an unspoiled future.

Most clubs and societies in Victoria's Chinatown hold open house on New Year's Day.

Victoria Chinatown Lions will pay their annual visit to elderly patients in the Chinese Hospital, Mount St. Mary's, and other hospitals. They will take special treats, pastries, and, of course, Li See.

And there will be dishes of Jie, the holy dish, a pure dish, not tainted by the blood of animal, fish or fowl. It is made of dried lily flowers, bean curd, bean sprouts, cloud ears (dried fungus), mushrooms, swiss chard, bean cake, white fruit, vegetables and Chinese Vermicelli. It is cooked in pure peanut oil, then blended with soy sauce and red bean curd sauce.

* * *

There will be no firecracker parades, no serpentine dragons, no lion dance in the streets.

"It's mostly a family affair," said Mrs. Tang.

Provincial Action Sought

Tax Probe Goal Of Municipalities

By A. M. MURPHY
City Hall Reporter

Long convinced that they are getting the short end of the stick on tax distribution, Greater Victoria municipalities approved a resolution Tuesday asking that a select committee be appointed by the provincial government to probe the whole tax distribution question.

Oak Bay's Reeve Allan Coxe was behind the motion, which received unanimous approval in principle from the district inter-municipal committee meeting Tuesday.

Tied in with the better-sharing deal was the proposal that Victoria's mayor and reeves of adjacent municipalities, along with other civic leaders in the capital district, get together and sort out their thinking on the matter of hospital construction and how to finance it.

CONCRETE PLANS

Coun. Frances Elford of Oak Bay urged that concrete plans and proposals be worked out with members of the area Hospital Planning Council so that when the time was ripe plans would be ready.

"We need to know where we are going and just what we are going to do," Mrs. Elford said.

CHANGE OF EMPHASIS

She said there might well be a change of emphasis on the whole plan, now that the provincial government has extended its chronic care treatment program. It might not be necessary now, she said, to have such an elaborate new hospital program now that the government has taken some of the chronic care load.

The Oak Bay resolution pointed out that the "glaring defect" in municipal-provincial relations was that the municipal governments were required to pay for such things as education, health and hospital construction out of real property tax.

BURDEN NOT FAIR

The burden on the property owner was not fair, the motion indicated and it was time the province carried more of the load.

It was not fair in view of the fact that provincial and federal governments made use of their wide powers to levy taxes, directly related to the citizens' ability to pay, such as income tax, consumer or sales tax, natural resources tax and succession duties.

SOCIAL LEGISLATION

Social legislation programs generally as well as matters of hospitals, health and education, would also be considered by the select committee and recommendations made to the legislature.

"This is a vital matter and I suggest that each council consider it and forward it directly to the provincial government so that it might be in time for the coming session," said Reeve Hugh Curtis of Saanich.

CENTRAL SAANICH

"I certainly think the council of Central Saanich will approve," said Reeve R. Gordon Lee.

It should be pointed out to the provincial government that the municipalities were still vitally interested in the whole hospital construction issue despite the fact that the voters turned their backs on it, Reeve Curtis said. It was still a matter of deep concern.

Boat Stolen

A 14-foot fibreglass boat with a 40-horsepower motor has been reported stolen from the Oak Bay marina. It is worth $900. A trailer, taken at the same time, has been recovered.

Wide Area Scoured

Search Parties Fail To Find Clues to Trio

A search carried out in perfect weather by aircraft and ships for three missing hunters Tuesday failed to turn up any clue to their disappearance.

The search involved a coast guard helicopter and two coast guard cutters, the Victoria-based RCMP launch, Victoria and two 16-foot RCMP runabouts.

A rescue centre spokesman said the area searched Tuesday took in the small islands in the Oak Bay marina area, Chatham and Discovery Islands, where the boys had originally planned to go, Sidney, William Head and Sooke, while the U.S. Coast Guard searched waters from San Juan Islands to the Mainland.

Missing since midnight Saturday are Dennis Powell, 18, of 1240 Newport, Ronald Hynds, 18, of 2428 Dalhousie, and Wade Squires, 17, of 2741 Dewdney. They left for Chatham and Discovery Island Saturday night to be on hand for early morning brant shooting.

COPTER DELAYED

The Coast Guard helicopter was delayed getting away Tuesday morning due to a mechanical problem which developed

Monday afternoon. The crew worked through Monday night and part of Tuesday morning to make the aircraft serviceable.

The air search Tuesday morning was made by an RCC Dakota from Comox. An RCC Comox-based helicopter, which was scheduled to join the search Tuesday morning was re-routed to the rugged terrain at Baldy Hughes, north of Prince George, to aid in the search for RCAF Sgt. Robert Taylor, missing in below-zero weather since Sunday.

Two of the boys are Oak Bay High School students, while Powell is taking a three-year taxidermy apprenticeship with Ralph Wherry, who owns the boat the three were in.

While officials were searching the wide area, a private search by relatives of the missing boys was going on.

RELATIVES HUNT

While officials were searching the wide area, a private search by relatives of the missing boys was going on.

Jack W. Squire, father of Wade Squire, took his boat out to search waters around Discovery Island, Keith Hynds, Ronald Hynds' uncle, and Ronald's father, Herbert Hynds, chartered a private plane for a search.

He said many fishboats tied up in Victoria harbor would be ideal in a search operation.

"They are all equipped with radio-telephones, and their captains have excellent knowledge of the waters," he said.

He said it would be necessary to work out search patterns through a searchmaster.

"There are too many people losing their lives in the water," he said.

A small boat rescue force has been proposed by a former commander of the Victoria Power Boat Squadron.

Courtney Haddock said Tuesday he had put the idea up to officials of the squadron, for action at a meeting in Nanaimo.

He said small boats would be valuable in searching close to shore, where the present search boats cannot go.

Courtney Haddock said Tuesday he had put the idea up to officials of the squadron, for action at a meeting in Nanaimo.

He said small boats would be valuable in searching close to shore, where the present search boats cannot go.

He said many fishboats tied up in Victoria harbor would be ideal in a search operation.

"They are all equipped with radio-telephones, and their captains have excellent knowledge of the waters," he said.

He said it would be necessary to work out search patterns through a searchmaster.

"There are too many people losing their lives in the water," he said.

Fact or Fable?

Onion, Sock Around Neck Ancient Cures for Cold

NEW YORK (UPI)—Reach for the nose wipers if you "have a cold in duh bed."

But maybe you ought to dangle an onion around your throat, wrap a sock—sized around your neck, and, for good measure, down a horseradish cocktail.

You make the latter by mashing to dissolve horseradish in sugar water.

Don't laugh. Our ancestors used such remedies when fighting chills, coughs, fevers and runny noses.

Belief in power of the onion started with ancient man, earned right through to the Egyptians and persisted up to the twentieth century. All these oldtimers about colds came from "44 facts and fables about coughs and colds"—a new booklet issued by the Vick Chemical Co. at the peak of the sniffle season.

The onion, according to cold historians, was believed to have germ-killing qualities. Science, oddly, has proven that onions contain germ-killing chemical bulleins.

Puritan America had the best idea about the onion, however. The view then was that "anything that smells that bad must be good for you."

String came into the cold war before socks advanced to the neck for medical reasons. String around the neck or head was believed to keep the spirit of life in the sick part.

At one time in man's saga against disease, a red or black string around the throat was considered a sure-fire way of preventing colds in the head and throat.

Necks got soaked along about the 17th century. The sock had to be red and soiled—worn at least once by a strong, healthy soul.

The rule for sucking a cold—the foot part must be applied directly to the throat. The whole routine is useless unless a woman uses a man's sock—and a man, a woman's.

One old-time remedy that still meets with favor among those who doctor themselves: hang your hat on the bedpost, climb into bed and sip whiskey until you see two hats.

Facts about colds prove that you can have four types of colds at once, according to science. That's a grand slam.

If you have a runny nose, that's rhinitis. If nose and throat are irritated, you have nasopharyngitis. A cough from a rednecked throat is tracheitis. When the cough migrates to the chest, you've got bronchitis.

The booklet reminds that in this doctored era, best reach for the phone if temperature rises about 100 degrees. Call the doctor.

But before that, even ancient remedies might help. The cynic maintains that all colds act one way, saying:

"Call a doctor and it goes away in seven days. Don't call a doctor and it goes away in seven days."

Fashion Jargon Double Talk

By KELLY SMITH

NEW YORK (AP)—Double-talk is a skill monopolized by the fashion world. A first grader knows the primary colors: Red, blue and yellow.

But go to a fashion show, read a magazine or drop in your department store and see if you can find them.

There's subtle sunset, persimmon, cabbage, wicker, flash lightning, twin leopard, vanilla ice, fire alarm, spring orchard, and undercover to name a few. These are colors 200 fashion writers attending the New York couture group style preview saw last week. Even the experts were baffled.

Instead of green, light green or dark green, there's spring green, surly green, baseball green, wild green, grass green, barley green, ice green, charreuse, deep charreuse and lime.

UNRECOGNIZABLE. You wouldn't recognize "cav-lar" as the latest term for black, or "martini" instead of tan.

A description of a dress might read: "Here's Marge in a spring orchard of neo-oriental blue-baseball stripes topped by French-vanilla cuffs, ginger facing and robin's-egg buttons."

In English, that means Marge is wearing a blue and white striped dress with a white collar and cuffs.

"I deal in red, white and blue," says designer Victor Joris. "Someone else makes out what to call it. I don't always recognize my own clothes."

Joris isn't the only one who's confused.

St. John's Afternoon Branch of the WA will meet on Tuesday, Jan. 25, at 2 p.m. in the lower hall, continuing the study book Salty Christmas.

MUSIC TEACHERS Registered Music Teachers Association (Victoria Branch) will hold a general meeting at 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, Jan. 19, at St. Margaret's School, Fort Street.

GEORGE JAY George Jay Home and School Club will hold its next general meeting on Wednesday, Jan. 19, at 8 p.m. in the school auditorium. Mrs. Marion Small will be guest speaker.

Dear Ann Landers: I live in Denver. If I lived in Chicago I would go right to your office and give you a kiss for the letter you printed about the woman who is going through the menopause and whose husband thought she was complaining just to get attention. I am married to the same kind.

For over a year I have had dizzy spells and hot flashes. One minute I feel like I am burning up. Ten minutes later I have to put on a sweater. Last week I got a terrible hot flash during a bridge game. Max and I have a set game every Thursday night with my sister and her husband. Thank God it wasn't strangers. I said, "Max, I'm hot. Please open the window."

He said, "In five minutes you'll be telling me to turn up the heat. I think you are getting nutty."

A person who hasn't gone through the change can't imagine what it's like. Please print this letter and I will put it right under Max's chopped herring tonight.—GRATEFUL

Dear Grateful: Here's your letter and I'd like to add a word of my own. Any wife who goes to the trouble of making chopped herring for her husband deserves extra love and consideration. Now, aren't you ashamed of yourself, Max?

Dear Ann Landers: I am 12 years old and need your advice already.

Yesterday was Mom's birthday. Us kids didn't remember her with a card or anything and neither did Dad. Mom was very quiet until dinner time. Then all of a sudden she said, "I guess I am only a housekeeper and laundry woman around here. Nobody cares about me. Not one of you remembered that today was my birthday."

Dad said he was sorry but he had a lot on his mind lately. My older sister almost cried. My little brother went to his room and got his piggy bank. He tried to give it to Mom but she wouldn't take it.

We love Mom and feel very sorry about this. What can we do to make her happy again?—FAMILY TROUBLES

Dear Family: It's too late to do anything about Mom's birthday this year, so stop crying. She will cheer up faster if you are sweet and helpful around the house.

Get a 1966 calendar now and mark off Mom's birthday a week in advance so you don't forget next year. And be sure to remind your Dad. He may have a lot on his mind a year from now, too.

Dear Ann Landers: Four months ago I married a wonderful man. It was a second marriage for both of us. He has three children.

I was born and raised in another part of the country and I'm doing my best to make friends here. The big problem is that I have never met my husband's parents although they live less than five miles from us. My husband says very little about them but I know they are fond of his former wife and children.

Am I being rude by not making the first move? A friend of mine says it is up to me to invite my in-laws to my home. Is she right? Please give me some advice.—STICKY WICKET

Dear Sticky: This whole deal smells like a strong wind from a glue factory. Either your husband's parents have told your husband that they don't wish to meet you, or he has not had the nerve to suggest it. You are entitled to know the truth. Ask him.

Acetylsalicylic Acid

Common Household Drug Causes Many Poisonings

CALGARY (CP)—A common household drug was the cause of more than 5,000 poisonings in Canada in 1963, says Mrs. B. P. Marillat of Edmonton, a member of the advisory council of consumers to the food and drug directorate.

Acetylsalicylic acid, used in headache tablets, heads the list

Alberta Provincial Consumers' Association, represented the consumer on the panel. Far too many persons resort to self-medication and either ignore directions or take too large a dosage, the panel found. "as few as 12 headache tablets can kill a child," Mrs. Marillat remarked.

"Canadians consumed 1,500,000 of these tablets during 1963, assuming they were safe, because they are so common," she said.

The public must educate themselves to ask, "Is this pill really necessary?" Advertising lures them into a false sense of security as to the harmlessness of a drug.

School Counsellor Says ...

Childhood Is Time Of Great Stress

TORONTO (CP)—An elementary school guidance counsellor says an overwhelming number of children come to her with emotional problems.

"In the new year, I almost had to send for mops for the children who came crying into my office," Ruth Gilson, student counsellor in the guidance department of Givens Street Public School said.

The school is one of two elementary schools in Toronto that offer this service. Miss Gilson, speaking during a panel discussion at a meeting of the Ontario Association for Emotionally Disturbed Children, said some children's worries feature dying, what they will become, and parental conflicts.

"We think of childhood as a happy time of life but it is one with great periods of stress," Miss Gilson said. "It ... can have greater stresses than adulthood."

Miss Gilson said some children who have acted up in class have later unloaded their problems in discussions with her and "cried their hearts out."

NEED SYMPATHY She said that "without a sympathetic ear, a lot of these children will become ill."

Arthur C. Keating, chairman of guidance at Beverley Heights Junior High School, said rehabilitation of emotionally disturbed children and adolescents should be undertaken by the school system. Only extremely disturbed children such as psychotics should be excepted from this plan, he said.

But he said that before emotionally disturbed children can be considered, an adequate guidance counselling system must be established for the normal school population.

Mr. Keating said the counsellor's role has changed from vocational to emotional guidance because of the complexity of society.

Historically, guidance was tied to vocational counselling for students who left school at an early age. Because of the need for more education there has been a shift from vocational to educational and emotional counselling, he said.

Thom-Blakey

Couple to Reside At Campbell River

Exquisite embroidered appliques were a highlight to the fitted bodice of the white satin gown worn by Leigh Evelyn Blakey, Saturday evening, when she became the bride of Daryl Edward Thom.

The fitted bodice also featured a round neckline, elbow-length sleeves and a full court train which swept back from two bows at the shoulders. Her bouffant veil misted to her shoulders from a headpiece of a single self-fabric rose and she carried a white Bible, topped with an arrangement of pink roses. Only jewelry was a pearl pendant, gift of the groom.

Setting the pink and white theme for the wedding were the arrangements of pink chrysanthemums and carnations which decorated St. Columba Church for the evening service. Rev. John Vickers officiated at the ceremony uniting the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. D. A. Blakey of Victoria and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Earl Thom, 1092 Madrona Drive. Paul Blakey gave his sister in marriage.

Street-length dresses of fuchsia-pink velveteen, made by matron of honor Mrs. L. V. Thomas, were worn by the bride's attendants. Bridesmaids were the Misses Vicki Prette

Accenting their outfits were self-fabric bow headpieces, edged with net, and colonial bouquets of pink carnations, centred with roses en tone. The bridesmaids' only jewelry was silver lockets, gifts of the bride and groom.

Ronald Thom was best man for his brother. Ushering guests to their pews were L. V. Thomas and V. E. Gallop, Campbell River.

Miniature figures of a bride and groom, which had decorated the wedding cake of the bride's parents, topped the three-tier cake which centred the head table at the reception following in Holyrood House. R. A. B. Prette proposed the toast to the bride.

The couple will make their home at Campbell River following a honeymoon trip to the mainland. The new Mrs. Thom chose a three-piece walking suit of muted jade green, interwoven with black thread, for traveling. Complementing the ensemble were black accessories and an orchid corsage.

Visits College

CAMBRIDGE, England (Reuters)—Prince Charles, 17, heir to the British throne, Sunday revived speculation about his future education by making his first visit to a university.

The prince called at Magdalen College, Cambridge, to see his 21-year-old student cousin, Prince Richard of Gloucester, who described it as a "private visit." There has been no announcement yet about a university education for the prince, who flies to Australia at the end of this month to spend a term at Timbertop, the bush country outpost of Geelong Grammar School.

Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Leggett, 536 Paradise Street, wish to announce the forthcoming marriage of their youngest daughter, Teresa Lee to Mr. Ronald Arthur Longbottom, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Longbottom of Victoria. The marriage will take place February 11 at St. Saviour's Church with Rev. A. Mudford officiating.

Auxiliary Names Officers

Officers for the coming year were elected at the annual meeting of Ladies Auxiliary No. 12, Army, Navy and Air Force Veterans.

President is Mrs. R. MacCallum and others on the executive are Mrs. G. Conney, past president; Mrs. I. Scott, first vice-president; Mrs. E. Hogg, second vice-president; Mrs. L. MacLeod, secretary, and Mrs. V. Barry, treasurer. Executive officers are Mrs. N. Slater, Mrs. E. Conway, Mrs. H. Sommers and Mrs. M. Lawry. Mrs. S. Tahouney is standard bearer, and Mrs. E. Sturk is sergeant-at-arms.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Fink have come from their home in the Kootenays for a visit in Victoria. On Thursday they will be among guests at a party given by Mr. and Mrs. John Erb at their home on Beach Drive.

February Wedding

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Bell of Vancouver announce the forthcoming marriage of their daughter, Joan, to Mr. Kenneth J. Firkins, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Firkins, Vancouver. The bride-to-be is a graduate of St. Margaret's School. The wedding will take place on Saturday, Feb. 12.

Garden Notes

You're the Target!

By M. V. CHESNUT
I don't think the average backyard gardener realizes just how important he is in the eyes of seedsmen, nurserymen and plant dealers. With the mushrooming growth of hobby gardening, horticultural supplies are getting to be pretty big business nowadays, and skilled plant scientists and researchers the world over are beating their brains to develop newer and better flowers, fruits and vegetables, all with a view to coaxing a couple of those elusive bucks from our well-worn pocket-books.

The new catalogues, now beginning to arrive, are full of these 1966 models of the plant world. One of these is a new vegetable to be called Colbago, created at the University of New Hampshire by crossing the Chinese celery-cabbage with a rutabaga turnip. The crisp white flesh of the root is said to combine the flavors of Chinese cabbage, regular cabbage and rutabaga, and it can be eaten raw in salads, or as a boiled or mashed vegetable.

Two new muskmelons are announced for 1966, both of which seem to have possibilities for our climate. New Sweet Granite, from the University of New Hampshire, makes an unusually sweet melon weighing about 3 pounds and ripening its fruit in 80 days. The University of Minnesota has developed a first-generation hybrid from the older Iroquois melon which has been named New Hybrid 26. This one, too, ripens its fruit very much earlier than the older melons, making an oval muskmelon averaging 5 to 6 pounds, with plants unusually resistant to fusarium disease, a common trouble in melons, tomatoes and cucumbers.

Peppers are getting quite a play this year, with seeds of three new kinds coming on the market this spring. Pick-A-Peck makes a low, compact plant bearing clusters of smallish bright red peppers, flesh firm and thick, flavor mild rather than hot. Spartan Emerald, from Michigan State University, is an early-maturing sweet green pepper, blocky and thick-fleshed, and borne upright on 18-inch sturdy plants.

The Sweet Cream pepper, from the University of Minnesota, bears large, creamy-white fruits very early on 8 to 10-inch plants. These white peppers are said to be particularly good sliced raw into salads. Both Spartan Emerald and Sweet Cream are recommended for freezing.

Cucumbers, too, are very much in the news this year. One called "M & M Hybrid" has been especially bred for the small home garden, to be grown on a fence or trellis, for ordinary cucumbers are notorious space-stealers with their sprawling, ground-hugging vines. The M & M Hybrid cucumber has built-in resistance to mildew and mosaic disease, bearing 8-inch fruits that are ready for picking in 60 days.

Tiny Dill is another space-saving cucumber, making bushy plants with a spread of only 2 feet. The finger-length pickle cucumbers are borne in great profusion, ripening in only 55 days. Empress Hybrid is an early-bearing, disease-resistant cucumber making the conventional trailing vine but bearing long, slim fruits with crisp white flesh and excellent flavor.

Probably the most unusual cucumber of the year is a new first-generation hybrid called Burples, announced by the George W. Park Seed Co. of South Carolina. This one should prove a godsend to those folks who cannot tolerate ordinary cukes, but Burples has other advantages besides its low-acid makeup. It is early, disease-resistant, its blossoms set fruit even in cool weather, and it may be picked and eaten when only 2 inches long, or cut into sticks when the cukes are 10 inches long.

ERMA BOMBECK on Freezer Problems

Logic and Cold Storage

This was a big month for us. We made the last payment on our home freezer.

When you think about it, 30 months is a long time to pay on an appliance. But it was June, 1963, and I felt I couldn't live through another "harvest" without laying in some fresh corn on the cob, green beans, peaches and strawberries. So we bought the freezer on time.

The first week, I snapped and broke 30 pounds of green beans. I blanched, cooled them, put them into plastic bags, then into boxes, with the flourish of a monastery monk. I marked them, "Green Beans: June 5, 1963."

By June 28, 1963, we had eaten 30 pounds of green beans. I went the same route with corn and carrots. No matter what quantities I put into the freezer, we had eaten it clean by the end of the week.

In the fall, I bought a bushel of apples. I peeled, corred, blanched, cooled, bagged, boxed and labelled. The yield was eight quarts which someone figured cost me $2.33 a quart counting labor. (Figured from the rise-paddy minimum wage scale.)

One day in 1964, my husband decided to check out the freezer. I held my breath. "Well now, what do we have on in this shelf?" he asked quizzically.

"Snowballs," I said softly. "The kids made them up when it snowed and when it's summer they can have a snowball fight." And what are all these brown paper bags filled with? Steaks? Rump Roasts? Chopos? "You're warm," I said, slamming the door shut. "How warm?" he said, opening it again. "Chicken innards," he gasped.

"That's right. You always said I wasn't to put them into the garbage can until the day of pick-up and I thought I could store them in the freezer until garbage day. I guess I forgot to put a few of them out."

He looked like he was going to be sick. "And is this what I think it is?"

"That's right," I said. "It's a transistor battery. Someone said if you put them in a freezer, they'd re-charge themselves."

It didn't take a marriage counselor to tell me my empty cupboard. Something had to be done and fast. That weekend, I took $10 and bought items just for the freezer... a couple packages of tripe, eight cartons of spinach, four boxes of rhubarb and five pounds of liver.

"We'll never eat those things," my husband complained. "You know we hate liver and tripe and spinach and rhubarb." "But if we didn't have a freezer, where else could we store them?" Boy, where were men when they passed out logic!

The Little World of SHEILAH GRAHAM

Granny-to-Be at 24

HOLLYWOOD (NANA) — The youngest expectant grandmother is 24-year-old Mrs. Forrest Tucker. Tucker's daughter by a previous marriage is expecting twins.

Van Johnson flew to Chicago yesterday for June Allyson's opening on stage in Goodbye Ghost. The idea is for Van to take over the leading lady's role and come with the show to Broadway — if the reviews are promising, that is. June and Van made some movie hits together in the old days at MGM, and it would be interesting to see them together again — before a live audience. . . . And this must have happened while I was in London. June has reconciled with ex-husband, former barber Glenn Maxwell. They haven't remarried as yet, but Glenn is travelling with her. . . . and she does have to work, says June. The millions she should be getting from late husband Dick Powell's estate had not yet come through.

Jean Pierre Aumont has been on a flying cocktail party from coast to coast to promote the product of that liquor firm. What better place than to be flying high? . . . The recent rains in Los Angeles put all the new TV pilots behind schedule. If it isn't rain, it's fog. But in between — the old glorious weather. . . . Jack Leonard should delete the blue material from his act when there are children present. People are still tut-tutting about his holiday shows in Florida.

Shari Lewis, the diminutive star, has a profitable sideline. She wrote a book called Fun on a Boat, and not only does she get a free boat every year from a boat company but the same outfit bought 250,000 copies of the book to distribute.

Before leaving for the coast I spotted Seven Arts boss Ray Stark dining at Danny's with Boris Eklund and the David Mielgman. Britt and Ray minus spouses — Peter Sellers took off for London, and Mrs. Stark was in California.

Who said the movies were a fly-by-night career? George Marshall, now directing Bob Hope in Boy, Did I Get a Wrong Number, did the same for Ruth Roland — if you can remember that far back in the silent era in Adventures of Ruth, and played the villain to boot. . . . Billionaire Aristotle Onassis is reportedly asking singer Maria Callas to make her separation from Giovanni Meneghini permanent via the divorce courts. Marriage, anyone?

Even though Sybil Burton Christopher is married to an American, she is thinking twice, she told me, before changing her citizenship status. "My two daughters are British subjects. I manage very well as a British resident of New York. So I will take my time." The chief nuisance is always having to pay your income tax when you leave the country and not being able to vote.

Barefoot in the Park — film version — is up for grabs. Natalie Wood is interested. So is Marie Thomas, now playing the part in London. And what's wrong with giving the role to Elizabeth Ashley who created the role on Broadway? There should be a law about these things.

Anna Southern is always saying, "No more TV series." But she always comes back for more. And now that her good chum Deal Arnaz is back in business, she will probably do a series for him.

Those Doris Day lookalike girls in the recent competition are telling all sorts of stories about their treatment in Hollywood. One girl told me they were not allowed to go out from their hotel in case they got into trouble. They had no complaints about Doris. The usually reticent star put herself out to give the girls a good time. I can see it now. Double malts on the rocks. Miss Day features a soda fountain at home, not a bar.

If they had a competition for the worst films of the year, the Brynner-Brandt Morituri, Harlow and Kila Me Stupid would have to be featured for 1965.

The happiest-looking couple in New York, Margaret Leighton and Michael Wildgen, here for Tennessee Williams' play, Slapstick Tragedy — Maggie to star, Mike to manage.

Jeanne Moreau will come to New York when she completes her picture for Tony Richardson. How wise she was not to come here with Viva Maria co-star Brigitte Bardot. No one enjoys being pushed into the background, and while Moreau is a better actress than Bardot, Brigitte travels with built-in excitement that grabs all the attention.

Epic Deluxe

That Tough Little Car from General Motors is here for 1966.

Epic. Envoy Epic by General Motors—'66 edition—That Tough Little Car with the pleasingly little price. And for this low price, Epic/66 gives you a whole raft of good things: very economical motoring, thanks to a combination of low gas consumption, low maintenance and excellent durability. Very convenient motoring, thanks to General Motors nation-wide network of dealers. Very pleasant motoring, with Epic's four-passenger room, big trunk, easy parkability, sports-car handling. Very pleasant, indeed—and you can thank Epic/66's surprisingly clean-heels pickup in traffic and effortless cruising on the highway for that (plus a top-notch heater for winter!). Your wife will love to drive Epic too, if she can ever persuade you to get out from behind the wheel.

What more should you know about Epic for '66? Your Chevrolet-Envoy dealer's got all the information you want. And he's got the Epic/66 too—waiting for you to come in and drive it. See him—and Epic/66—today!

Grit Directions May Change---and Leadership Too

Pallid Plans Point Up Pearson Dilemma

By RON COLLISTER
Colonist Ottawa Bureau
OTTAWA—Prime Minister Pearson's blueprint for this session of parliament gropes with the challenge of the double squeeze.

with a whole new slate of ideas at a time when party leadership and party direction may be changing.

The throne speech that the government placed in the hands of Governor-General Vanier Tuesday read like the tail-end of a four-year program accidentally interrupted by the Nov. 8 election.

Before the end of March, the Commons has to approve spending estimates of more than $7,000,000,000, then move to the spending for the next year.

This change will probably be seen in the Spring budget.

does not have high rating among proposed legislation.

senate chamber on April 5 last year, plus a promise to implement a handful of election promises.

Tired-Blood Speech Opposition Agrees

Vanier reads speech

By FRASER KELLY
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—Led by Conservative Chief John Diefenbaker, opposition leaders vehemently tore the Throne Speech apart Tuesday, serving notice that the 27th Parliament could be one of the longest and roughest on record.

Branding the speech "pallid, weak and anemic," Mr. Diefenbaker indicated he would seize the earliest opportunity to move no confidence in the government.

And he exhorted all other opposition groups to join him in condemnation of the government for refusing to boost old age pensions from $75 to $100.

He pointed out that a defeat of the government in the House would not necessarily mean another election. Governor-General Vanier could call on him to form a government.

Any hope that the last six months away from the Commons had mellowed Mr. Diefenbaker or his followers evaporated with the throne speech.

Mr. Diefenbaker said the speech was a "photostat copy of the last one" and it indicated the government has done nothing for 200 days.

Mr. Diefenbaker said the whole government program showed a "conversion" in Liberal policy from former finance minister Walter Gordon to Trade and Commerce Minister Robert Winters.

Mr. Diefenbaker said the whole government program showed a "conversion" in Liberal policy from former finance minister Walter Gordon to Trade and Commerce Minister Robert Winters.

Asked to describe the speech in one word, Mr. Diefenbaker paused, then said: "Puny."

Banking News Cheerful

Premier Bennett Tuesday labelled the Throne Speech from Ottawa a "milk and water" speech for children, rather than a "tea and coffee" one for adults.

"To be fair," he said after reading press reports of the opening of Parliament, "no government gives too much of its policy in a Speech from the Throne."

The premier was pleased to

Ironsi Keeps Lid on Nigeria As 50 Officers Executed

LAGOS (AP)—An army power struggle has followed Nigeria's military take-over with perhaps as many as 50 officers reported executed and an unsuccessful attempt made to assassinate the country's new leader, Maj. Gen. Aguiyi Ironsi.

Ironsi claimed, however, that all military units in the country had pledged loyalty to his new regime.

Reliable sources said the confused army struggle was around Ironsi and between rival factions. They said up to 50 officers had been executed. A lieutenant-colonel was executed for attempting to kill Ironsi.

Officials in London reported earlier Ironsi seemed in control.

Backing this up, Britain said it

Nuclear Expert Berserk

UPTON, N.Y. (UPI)—A nuclear engineer, described as "a very quiet and friendly person," went berserk at the Atomic Energy Commission's Brookhaven laboratory Tuesday, shot three fellow scientists, attempted to shoot a fourth and then committed suicide.

Chief of Suffolk County detectives Oray Edwards said that Michael Maresca, 34, came to work at the sprawling, 3,500-acre laboratory armed with a shotgun, stripped to the waist and Edwards said Maresca first entered one of the large labs where James Powell, 33, another nuclear engineer, was sitting at a desk by the door.

Without uttering a word, Maresca fired one blast at Powell, striking him in the chest.

Maresca then ran down a corridor to an office where he shot associate physicist Martin Zuker in the hip and hand. He then went to a laboratory room where

Wife Dies In Snow Near Home

DAWSON CREEK (CP)—An attempt to walk a little more than a mile to her home from her husband's stalled truck, resulted in death for Mrs. Wilfred Mackett, 77-year-old resident of the Dawson Creek area.

Police said she was in a truck with her husband when they bogged down in a snow bank. The husband left her in the vehicle and started walking for help. When he returned, she was missing and her body was found later, about 1 1/2 miles from their farm home.

Police said she apparently started walking in the 25-degree below weather and became lost in the drifting snow and darkness.

Refugee Camp Assaulted

SAIGON (AP)—With a ceasefire for the lunar new year only hours away, Viet Cong guerrillas attacked a refugee centre south of Da Nang early today, killing or wounding about 40 refugees.

The attack at Tam Ky was the sharpest in a series of harassing actions by the Viet Cong as both sides prepared for a respite.

The Viet Cong's four-day ceasefire begins at 11 p.m. today. South Viet Nam and its allies will observe a 78-hour truce starting at noon Thursday.

Two U.S. servicemen were wounded early today when a bomb exploded near an American billet at Can Tho, 90 miles southwest of Saigon.

The Viet Cong also entered the refugee settlement area to the south and shot it up. Ground fighting Tuesday dwindled to a trickle.

That Was the Divorce That Was

Only a Housekeeper, Wife Told

LONDON (LAT)—The British have been known for breaking bad news gently but now comes a husband who waits seven months to tell his wife he divorced her—and then over the supper table after being served.

His precise words are lost to posterity but, as a London high court judge reported this week, "He told her she was no longer his wife but only his housekeeper."

"Of course after that there followed a great upset," the judge noted drily.

Much of the fault was with her lawyers. The lawyer initially handling her defence died and the firm apparently forgot all about it.

The lawyers were ordered to pay all the wife's court costs—as well as the husband's—for the oversight and the divorce was nullified.

The curious case began in 1962 when Mrs. Hilda Newton said she had found evidence that her husband of 14 years, William, had committed adultery. She locked him out of her bedroom.

In July, 1964, William filed for divorce on the grounds of cruelty, alleging among other thing that Hilda refused to have meals with him.

Hilda sent to a lawyer who began preparing a defence. William's lawyer got in touch with Hilda's lawyers, but after failing to get responses, they filed for an uncontested divorce, which was granted last May and made final in August.

But, William, a railway worker, was in no hurry to disturb his home life. It was only last month when Hilda, "after giving him his supper as usual," asked for her annual free pass to use the railways that he let her in on the secret of the May decree.

She was no longer entitled to a free pass, he said, because she was no longer his wife.

The divorce petition will not be set down for a hearing, the judge ruled.

Rhodesian Spirits Reach High Point

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (LAT)—Rain and the Nigerian military coup, plus official assurances that gasoline supplies are adequate, combined Tuesday to raise white Rhodesian spirits to the highest point since Christmas.

Much of Matabeleland, the cattle-growing southwestern region, continued to get rains which started last Saturday, although much more is needed to end the two-year drought in some districts. Cattlemen hoped they would not have to carry out a government plan to move their stock to the northeast. Some cattle already have been brought to fields within sight of Salisbury.

The crisis in Nigeria gave encouragement to Rhodesians who feel the developments there will bring new pressures on British Prime Minister Harold Wilson to ease his economic sanctions against the regime of Premier Ian Smith.

A government official saw the Nigerian coup as the biggest boost thus far to British Conservatives in Parliament, who are seeking a settlement with Smith without the prior destruction of the Rhodesian economy.

"With the Nigerian Federation on the brink of disintegrating, even Wilson must have doubts about pushing Rhodesia toward black majority rule," a Rhodesian official said.

And British taxpayers, regardless of their party, must question the wisdom of airlifting goods to Zambia at enormous cost in order to prevent the disruption of normal trade patterns which has already taken place between Rhodesia, Zambia and other nations. The sanctions may already have done permanent damage to the economy here and some observers fear the damage will ultimately have to be paid for by Britain if the Smith regime collapses.

GETTING ACROSS
Smith aides believe this point is getting across to visiting members of British Parliament, at least to the Tories who see in the Nigerian developments the possibility that British troops might be sent to aid in restoring order.

Smith's assurances to the nation Monday night were generally well received in Salisbury, particularly his pledge that gasoline rations will not be cut. Uncertainty over this issue was one of the most telling effects of British oil sanctions. But industry spokesmen confirmed Tuesday that the five oil companies operating here have total stocks of 200,000 tons of gasoline and diesel fuel.

TWO YEARS
This is claimed to be enough to fill Rhodesia's needs for two years at current ration levels, and few persons doubt that alternative crude oil supplies will appear if the embargo drags on.

With even non-priority motorists, Rhodesians were accepting cheerfully the fact that the country would get only 400 dozen tennis balls in the first quarter of 1966, although normal consumption is 1,400 dozen.

OLYMPICS
Tennis fans could take heart in the fact that the Rhodesian Lawn Tennis Association has entered the 1968 Davis Cup tournament with no rejection.

Rhodesians have also been told that Avery Brundage, president of the International Olympic Committee, has already ruled that he sees no bar to Rhodesia's entry in the 1968 Mexico City games.

Tired-Blood Speech

Douglas described the throne speech as "largely warmed-over leftovers, truly pedestrian, devoid of any new dynamic programs."

"There's nothing here to challenge the strong and excite the daring," he said using the same words Prime Minister Pearson had used in the 1963 campaign. "It looks as if the Fulton-Favreau Formula (to repatriate the constitution) is as dead as a doornail. It would like to have seen clear-cut statements on medicare and financial assistance to education," he said.

LIBERALS 'HEDGING'
Mr. Douglas said the government seemed to be hedging on its commitment to produce national medicare by 1967 on the provision that all provinces agree to its program. He maintained that the government should produce medicare legislation which would permit the provinces to join when they want one at a time.

TRIED BEFORE
That procedure, he said, had been followed when the hospital and diagnostic services act was introduced.

He also criticized the government for its failure to propose an increase in old age pensions. But he indicated that he would not help defeat the government on the issue.

"We have to give them a reasonable amount of time to see what they can do," he said. Last Sunday he urged that the government accept amendments to the Throne Speech without considering them a loss of confidence.

Candidate leader Real Caouette said it was "full of empty rhetoric... a nothing speech."

DEPLORES FAILURE
He too deplored the government's failure to mention an increase in old age pensions or family allowances. And he said his group would oppose any aid to education which he maintained is within provincial jurisdiction.

He said that before the government gives $25,000,000 to the Asian Bank, it should lend more money to the provinces and municipalities.

GLARING OMISSION
Secured leader Robert Thompson said one of the most glaring omissions was the government's failure to announce its intention to implement the new rules of the House of Commons.

"There was no mention of the Fowler recommendations on broadcasting," he said. Instead the new secretary of state (Judy LaMarsh) is offering a government film industry. Let's hope she doesn't play the star."

A RENAISSANCE
Former Conservative Minister Alvin Hamilton said it was "a rehash of last year's Throne Speech, very disappointing on the matter of pensions." "They must have known the CCF and ourselves really feel something must be done about pensions." "I think it is becoming more and more evident the government is moving back to the old managerial type of government — I call it economic drift. There was no awareness of the tight-rope between inflation and depression," he said.

New Democrat Deputy Leader David Lewis said: "There is nothing to suggest the government has any plans to deal with the period of automation and scientific revolution we are in. "There is nothing new or modern in the speech. It doesn't contain a word about pensions, a syllable about family allowances," he added.

Officials Back Appeals For Sukarno

SINGAPORE (UPI)—Ranking Indonesian officials appeared to be scrambling to get behind President Sukarno late Tuesday night by issuing appeals to the people to stand solidly behind the president.

Radio Jakarta, monitored in Singapore, was jammed with appeals from officials, including cabinet ministers.

The appeals, and resulting pledges of support, began Sunday when the powerful nationalist party (PNI) offered its unequivocal support to the 64-year-old president.

The radio said Sukarno sat down for a "heart-to-heart talk" Tuesday with leaders of the student union movement which had organized demonstrations against rising prices and the president's cabinet. An order was issued Sunday banning the demonstrations.

Sukarno reportedly told the students their actions were improper and could easily be exploited by a group that is "unhappy about the unity" between himself and the students.

The radio also reported that Sukarno thought the students were being encouraged by "an organized body."

hear that revision would be done on banking legislation, which might give the province a better chance of getting a charter for a Bank of B.C.

BIGGER GRANTS

He said he hoped the federal government's plans for increased grants to universities and a scholarship program would be made public before budget time in the provincial legislature.

Asked whether he would consider altering the budget for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1966, if more federal money was available in these areas, Mr. Bennett replied:

UNTIL LAST DAY

"My budget is never finalized until the last day, we are always willing to take a second look in British Columbia."

The premier would not comment on whether he thought $500,000,000 would be enough for reestablishment of a health resources fund. (Health Minister Eric Martin said recently he did not think this would be enough.)

Announcement that the government would continue to delay federal construction projects in areas where the construction industry was under heavy pressure from private building would probably not apply to British Columbia, Mr. Bennett said.

The inflationary trend was in Toronto and Montreal rather than B.C., he said.

NO NEED

This had already been pointed out to the federal government and there was no need for a cutback here in federal projects, said the premier.

His advice to Ottawa: "Canada has got to drive its economic system at 70 and 80 miles an hour instead of 20 miles an hour."

Your Good Health

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: I read that one health authority says that "the air pollution we breathe daily is equivalent to smoking two packs of cigarettes a day." Even a common, mental dishwasher like myself knows better than that. Years back when I used to smoke two packs a day I had a chronic cough and chest pain, and even coughed up blood at times.

After banishing the habit, my cough and chest pains ceased entirely, yet I'm still breathing that so-called air pollution.

I also have two nieces who smoked and had troubles. When they broke the habit, they felt better, too.—T.C.

I don't know what "health authority" you are quoting, but I think he's quite a mathematician if he thinks that he can translate "air pollution" into so many cigarettes, or so many packs.

No two people smoke cigarettes just the same way. Some inhale deeply, some don't. Some light a cigarette and wave it around and throw it away half smoked. Others smoke it down to the last half inch. "Two packs a day" means different things. So does "air pollution."

There's one thing for sure, and only about one: No matter how much or how little air pollution there is, it's a lot worse for the fellow who adds his own personal pollution from smoking.

Two bad things are worse than one. Let's not waste too much time trying to decide which kind of air pollution is "worse." If either is harmful, let's try to reduce it.

Dear Dr. Molner: My husband had a heart attack two months ago. X-rays now have revealed an enlarged heart. Does a heart ever return to normal size with proper medication, etc.—Mrs. N.G.

A heart enlarges as part of nature's endeavor to compensate for a defect or weakness in the heart. Sometimes there may be some reduction in size if, in one manner or another, the defect is corrected, but it is not to be expected that the heart will revert to its original size. This, however, is not very important. The important question is the degree to which the heart can return to normal ability to function. Enlargement, you see, is not in itself harmful, rather, it is a sign of something that has happened to the heart previously.

Chambers Top Player

All-Stars Chosen

NANAIMO—All-star selections for the Pacific Coast Amateur Hockey League were announced Tuesday afternoon.

The most valuable player award went to George Chambers, of Port Alberni, who was only one point behind in the voting.

GENTLEMAN
Another Port Alberni player, Dale Newberry, won the most gentlemanly player award and Bob Kiel of Powell River was runner-up.

The first all-star team consists of George McCormick of Powell River in goal; defencemen Andy McCallum of Powell River and Evert Henderson of Nanaimo; centre George Chambers of Powell River and wings Danny Zolob, James Peterson and Tom Mullin, all of Nanaimo.

SECOND TEAM

The second all-star team consists of Len Kropielinski, Nanaimo, in goal; Bob Kiel of Powell River and Bill Haslam, Nanaimo, defencemen; Rod Carman of Powell River, centre; and wings Tom Hunter of Comox and Barry Lang, Powell River.

Coach of the first team is Andy McCallum of Powell River and Red Carr, Nanaimo, coaches the second team.

The selections were chosen after ballots were distributed to all players and radio station representatives and team managers in the Powell River, Comox, Courtenay, Port Alberni and Nanaimo areas, where Pacific Coast League teams play.

Playoffs in the league start Jan. 29 at Nanaimo, when the local team takes on Port Alberni. This is a best-of-three series.

SECOND GAME
The second game will be at Alberni Feb. 5 and if a third game is necessary it will take place the next day at Nanaimo.

Winner of the series will go on to meet Powell River, the league leader. Bottom-dwelling Comox-Courtenay did not make the playoffs.

Rathlef Heads Car Club

NANAIMO—First meeting of 1966 for Nanaimo Sports Car Club on the weekend elected Bill Rathlef as president.

He succeeds Joe Cunningham. Other officers elected were Bob Bolinger, vice-president; Mag Cunningham, secretary; and Penny Harrison, treasurer.

Starting at 11 a.m. Jan. 20, a rally will be held starting from the Magic Minute Car Wash.

This competition will be designed to give the novice an even chance of competition with the experienced driver.

In an attempt to encourage more members, the next meeting at the Tally-Ho Jan. 27 will be open to the public.

Lion's Den

LADYSMITH—Members of the newly revived chamber of commerce will meet this Thursday at the Lion's Den to elect a slate of officers.

The Ladysmith chamber has been inactive for the past two years. So far the group has about 10 members.

DUNCAN—The date for an inquest into the shooting death of 15-year-old Victoria high school student Michael Ferguson has been set for Jan. 26, at First Funeral Chapel, Duncan, 7:30 p.m.

The inquest will be conducted by Duncan coroner Dr. R. R. Wilson.

The Victoria boy died from injuries when a 12-gauge shotgun was fired early last Saturday at Cowichan Bay.

Native Son

DUNCAN—Native son of Victoria Alfred Critchley died suddenly at Duncan, Jan. 17. He was born in 1901.

He had resided at Sidney, Port Alberni, Vancouver and for the past 11 years at Duncan.

Services will be held from First Funeral Chapel, Duncan, Thursday, at 11 a.m., followed by cremation.

DUNCAN—Victoria dairy farmer John Pendray was in two top positions when December milk and butterfat production results were calculated for the Vancouver Island South Dairy Herd Improvement Association by Inspector Jack Bell.

DUNCAN—Commercial and sports fishing will be the topic of a meeting at the Tally-Ho Jan. 27.

Courtenay Night School Hits Record Peak

COURTENAY—For the first time since adult classes have been offered in the Courtenay school district, enrolment has exceeded 1,000.

The 1,000 figure was surpassed Monday evening with the start of five courses—waitress training, guiding and fishing, intermediate contract bridge, Bishop method of advanced singing, and conversational French.

A class in interior decorating scheduled for Monday has been delayed a week due to the small registration.

Tuesday night classes starting include: golf, hair styling, changing school system, and family life film series. The speaker on Our Changing School System next Tuesday will be John Walsh, director of elementary education and his subject will be primary and intermediate grades.

The next film in the Family Life series is Walk Down Any Street and the economic and legal aspects of marriage will be discussed by Courtenay lawyer, Harold MacIvor.

The only classes planned for Wednesday are: How to Conduct a Meeting, and room maid training. Thursday courses include: Comox Valley history; guitar group lessons; South American dancing; and surviving in the bush.

Director Harry Harris reports he is considerably encouraged by the public response.

Pollution Samples Not Taken

Alberni Canal Off Limits

By MARY TAYLOR

PORT ALBERNI—Action of delegates to the annual convention of the Vancouver Island Affiliation of Fish and Game Clubs in Nanaimo in backing a resolution for more staff and authority for the Pollution Control Board, has been applauded by sportsmen in the Alberni Valley.

"Our local groups have been fighting for years for greater water pollution control," one sportsman said.

"Our great problem is in getting sufficient factual information to back up our laws. We are stumped by our lack of technical advice.

"We really need a marine biologist of our own. Provincial department of recreation and conservation biologists are most helpful, but are not in a position to take water samples in the Alberni Canal, our chief source of worry locally."

"The inlet comes under the heading of tidal waters and as a result is a federal problem."

Said another: "All you have to do is look at the water in the canal, and remember how clear it used to be, and you can tell the things polluted. But we can talk and scream and holler all we like. Positive facts and positive proof are almost impossible for us to get."

"We've wrestled with the problem for four years with no results."

"When the federal fisheries boat comes in, it seems the water gets cleared up rapidly. The company (Mac-Powell) claims to take daily samples. We have no way of proving them right or wrong unless we, too, have some way of taking and testing samples."

Chuck Plowright, an Alberni Valley delegate to the convention Sunday, said a biologist speaking at the meeting pointed out the great shortage of professional help available.

"Pollution control is just in its infancy according to him."

Mr. Plowright said, "Any young fellow going to this field could go right to the top."

"He also showed how many of the profitable byproducts of industry have been discovered by scientists trying for greater pollution control."

"We were told that within a year or 18 months, there will be no more hard detergents sold in the United States," Mr. Plowright said.

"Already packages are being marketed bearing a little label that states No Hard Detergents. These are non-foaming, and do not make the hard sediment in water that has caused so much trouble."

Sportsmen also feel that everyone should be interested in pollution problems. Chamber of Commerce figures released at the Chamber's annual meeting showed tourism making astonishing progress in this area.

One of the chief reasons tourism is coming in for the fishing and hunting in these areas.

Anything that damages the recreational value of the area will damage its second greatest industry irreparably, sportsmen say.

"In the United States, they are having to spend $41,000,000 to clear Lake Erie of the effects of pollution," the Nanaimo convention was told.

Courtenay Dislikes Notoriety

COURTENAY—The City of Courtenay has finally made national news; whether it was publicity or notoriety is another question.

Clerk-administrator William Moore, said he was "horrified" to find the story of the errant geese, who landed their owner in jail, on TV.

One of the parties concerned, who testified to the vocal ability of the geese has now reported to city hall, the geese are still gobbling.

Another city bylaw would allow the court to pass and order to remove the geese from the property. It was thought this might be the next step in the war of the geese.

It was put on night at city council this week.

OH DEER!
Ald. Stan Laver asked for the sign designating Glacier View Home, be removed from the private road to the highway and a slow sign put at each approach. He said the old folks often walk out to the road, which caused Ald. Willis to remark "Perhaps we should erect a Watch For Deers on the Highway sign."

THIS WAY
Trees which have grown exceptionally tall and according to some local residents, sway dangerously in the wind, have caused council some concern in the past and the subject came up again Monday.

The matter was referred to the protection committee but Ald. Sandy Strachan told Ald. Harris, "If the matter stumps you, you can call on Ald. Bell. The parks chairman, Ald. Bell, was the man involved in the last tree-cutting episode."

Council went into committee following the open business session, at the request of Ald. Harris. Also to be discussed in committee was the replacement for Gary Maddess recently released from his position as planning officer after a conviction for public mischief.

Aldermen decided to study the job and decide exactly what they are looking for. There was some talk of a works superintendent but the final outcome will be referred to the administrator.

WATER STUDY
The water survey report is now in the hands of the chairman, Geoff Browning, and a meeting to study the report will be held Wednesday. No mention was made of any details contained in the report.

It was learned however that the amendment to letters patent which would allow the regional district to institute a survey of the water situation, had not yet been approved.

The regional district, which after its inception found itself without a function, now appears to be coming into its own.

Besides the water survey council will ask the regional district to assume the deficit incurred annually by Glacier View Home. At present this is paid by the city with a donation from Cumberland and Comox.

LADIES NICE
The annual report of the parking meter attendant showed 643 tickets issued, 377.90 pennies and 111.228 tickets collected. Robert Lay, the attendant, also gave the ladies a pat on the back, calling them the best to deal with as drivers.

Notices of motion were given to amend the Advisory Planning and Traffic bylaws. It is expected that the Procedural By-law will also get a hard look.

The Traffic Bylaw required amending when a recent court case found the defence contesting the stop sign in the city were illegal. The case was taken to appeal court where a man won a dismissal of a charge of failing to yield the right of way after stopping a legal stop sign.

Building
DUNCAN—Building permits in North Cowichan reached $5,085,456 in 1965, topping 1964 by $3,372,236.00.

Throughout the year residences totalling $13,800 and repairs $5,800.

CHEMAINUS—Twenty-three-year-old Crofton resident James Douglas Squire, who pleaded not guilty to two charges of common assault, was convicted on one.

The other charge was dismissed. He was remanded for sentence pending a probation report.

The charges arose from an incident Nov. 19 when two residents filed a complaint against Squire.

DUNCAN—Two students were in Duncan court Tuesday charged with being intoxicated in a public place.

Police evidence was that on Craig Street January the two were found in a car which did not belong to them and were so confused they could not at first give their names.

It was a first offence for both. Magistrate Lance Heard fined each $15 and hoped they had learned a lesson.

DUNCAN—Babies and the growing child were topics when the child care committee of Women of the Moose met recently.

Miniature diapers were presented to each member.

Hummingbirds Excellent Home-Builders

By EDITH RAGLO

NANAIMO—You don't have to be a giant to build strong foundations.

Henry Weds Again

LADYSMITH—The cast and director of Royal Gambit are waiting anxiously for the adjudicator's reaction to their production Friday and Saturday.

The play is a Dominion Drama Festival entry, prepared by Ladysmith Little Theatre. It will be presented at Cedar Community Hall.

Featured in the Hermann Gressieker play are John Tooker, Evelyn Smith, Sharon Rukin, Joan Peddie, Diana Waddell, Paula Baker and Alma Mawson.

Curtain time both nights is 8 p.m. The play is about Henry VIII and his wives.

At Northfield Road a tiny Rufus Hummingbird has built a nest high among the branches, and has used it for the last two years.

The nest is solidly attached to a plum tree branch and has stood the test through many gale-force winds that have downed trees and played havoc with power lines.

And the nest was covered with three inches of snow at times which caused the branch to sway and sag.

A hummingbird, with its thin long beak, builds its nest with care, using plant down, lichen, fine grasses, spiderwebs and cocoons of insects and caterpillars and weaves it all securely onto a branch.

The supple, spreading branch rocks it gently in the winds, a safeguard against destruction by storms.

There's usually two creamy-white eggs to a clutch, which takes 14 days to hatch.

Each spring, when the tree is covered with blossoms, four hummingbirds appear.

Two begin work on re-lining the nest.

The recent big storm and snowfall broke branches of many trees, but left the tiny nest in Nanaimo intact.

Gagliardi Wows Students

By GUY STANLEY

B.C. Highways Minister P. A. Gagliardi left more than 100 University of Victoria students rolling in the aisles Monday, with homespun quips about resources, girl friends and broken promises.

"Our present (provincial) government has stated unequivocally that we are a Canada government first, and a B.C. government second," he said.

"Except where our natural resources are concerned. Anybody who comes out here to steal our resources, he's got to deal with me."

DUNCAN ROAD
On the Duncan-Lake Cowichan Highway:

"We've spent a lot of money on this highway. Maybe there are some university students here who still have to eat the dust on their roads."

"Man, if they saw what we'd done for you, they'd think they had the world by the tail on a downhill pull."

"Bless my soul," he said, "I look after more miles of highway (25,000) than anyone else in the free world."

On the provincial government taking over car insurance:

"I don't like socialism. Government should stay away from business."

B.C. BANK
What about the B.C. bank?

"It will just be financing Quebec and B.C. on the same basis. Competition is the best thing in the world."

"If you're after a girl friend, you don't think much of her until some one else starts chasing her. That's competition."

He added that since Premier Bennett waived all interest in the bank, he's hoping it may go through at Ottawa this session.

BLOOD TESTS
Mr. Gagliardi called for compulsory breathalyzer and blood tests to deter the drinking driver.

"If I can save a life, let's save it. It's time the slaughter stopped."

ROBEY THREAT
"Do you think I'd take a drink and turn myself loose on the highway? I'm dangerous enough sober."

Mr. Gagliardi's visit was sponsored by the University of Victoria Activities Council.

Repatriation Given Polite Burial

By RON COLLISTER
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—The historic dream of true independence for Canada through repatriation of its constitution from London is given a polite burial in the Throne Speech.

Canadians are now as far away as they ever were from getting full control over their constitution, to end those begging trips to London seeking amendments.

The reason is that Premier Lesage of Quebec changed his mind.

In the fall of 1964, Mr. Lesage attended a federal-provincial conference in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, the cradle of Confederation and agreed to a formula for repatriating the constitution, the British North America Act.

It was a glorious day in Canada's history and everyone hailed it as just that.

For 30 years, there had been heated discussion about bringing home the constitution so that Canada could do just what it liked without consulting London.

After the Charlottetown meeting, a federal-provincial conference of experts was held in Ottawa and the details of the agreement were concluded.

NEXT STEP

As the next step, nine provincial legislatures rapidly approved the formula for repatriation, which is called the Fulton-Favreau Formula after two justice ministers who helped draw it up.

But Quebec stalled — and stalled.

Over the past year, Mr. Lesage has been called upon to explain the delay.

He has always flatly denied that it was dead and has denounced newsmen who suggested it was.

But, in Quebec City this week, he finally admitted that adoption of the formula for amending the constitution would become "quickly outmoded" so he no longer supported it.

COLD FEET

As Quebec observers see it, Mr. Lesage began having cold feet when he saw the build-up of opposition to accepting the formula among his opponents in Quebec.

In yesterday's Throne Speech, the matter is dealt with in one meek, dejected paragraph.

POLITE BURIAL

"It remains the objective of my ministers," Governor General Vanier intoned, "to provide that the constitution of Canada be amended in Canada."

Asked if this meant that repatriation is dead, federal sources here pointed to the Lesage inaction and the fact that nothing can be done without Quebec's support.

Tory Leader John Diefenbaker, who, during the election campaign, claimed that the formula was "as dead as a do," last night claimed: "This is the death-knell."

He recalled that the Conservative party had stood alone against the formula which, he claimed in the election, would turn Canada into "ten satraps" and put the constitution in a straightjacket for all time.

"Now," he said last night, with a slight smile of success, "it has joined the ranks of the forgotten."

SOURCES CRITICIZE

Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson criticized the government for not telling Canadians of an alternative plan for bringing the constitution home.

"There is no statement about a new formula to substitute for the old one and the question is as ambiguous as the whole speech."

New Democratic Leader Tommy Douglas said that in his view the throne speech buried the Fulton-Favreau formula.

He criticized the old approach to getting a workable formula that would be agreeable to all and urged a parliamentary committee to hear submissions from interested groups.

EFFECTS ALL

"The constitution of Canada is something that affects all Canadians, not just the Prime Minister and the premiers," Mr. Douglas said.

But he rejected the idea of a confederation conference outside Parliament that is being pressed by Tory Leader Diefenbaker.

"That would be a shambles," said Mr. Douglas.

'NO ONE SURE'

Creditiste Leader Real Caouette said the government is now afraid to talk about the Fulton-Favreau formula because

"no one is sure about it any more."

Even Mr. Lesage didn't want to hear about it or talk about it.

They're buying it quietly, Caouette said.

SPEECH NEGATIVE

The retreat on the Fulton-Favreau formula blended well with the generally negative tone of the throne speech.

There was little that was new, omissions of some issues that could have stirred up a storm and, apparently, a calculated attempt to avoid trouble.

'LIKE TIGER'

In advance, it was reported that Mr. Pearson was coming into the new session "like a tiger."

But it wasn't the kind of speech that a tiger would have carried in its claws.

In fact, it sounded more like What's New, Pussycat?

Grits Offer Tepid Plans

It is important that the benefits (of prosperity) should not be jeopardized by excessive costs and prices which would endanger the stability of the economy."

● Changes in immigration, as will be recommended in a white paper to be ready soon.

● The appointment of an ombudsman, to investigate injustices, which was in last year's speech.

● Cuts in election expenses, also in the last speech.

● Any reference to the Municipal Loan Fund, which was set up two years ago with a $100,000,000 fund and which runs out on March 31.

And the government continues to stretch out its spending on public construction, an area where demand had started to push up prices.

● The balance of payments problem, which gives Canada a billion-dollar deficit this year.

Omitted are:

● Changes in broadcasting in Canada, as recommended by the Fowler Committee on Broadcasting.

In the speech for the second or third time are:

● A free vote on the death penalty.

● Banking legislation and related proposals.

● Overhaul of the railways.

● A science council to "encourage further progress of scientific research."

● O Canada, as Canada's national anthem, with God Save The Queen as the royal anthem of Canada.

The election promises are:

● Catch insurance for fishermen and a Canadian dairy council.

● A proposal for buying, re-developing and re-selling farms that are not viable economic units.

Cash advances for unthreshed grain when weather conditions prevent full harvesting.

Federal Authority Upheld

The new measures are:

● Massive aid to education.

● A single measure to authorize the major re-shaping of ministerial responsibilities envisaged by Prime Minister Pearson in last month's cabinet shakeup.

● An indication that the government, which has been criticized for its policy of co-operative federalism, may be digging in its heels before the demands of the provinces.

The throne speech declares: "While respecting fully the responsibilities of the provinces, the government is equally resolved to maintain the constitutional responsibilities of the federal authority."

The government pointed up its manpower retraining programs and its war on poverty, but there was little in the speech that was new.

It avoided any mention at all of its policy on raises for old age pensioners, which is expected to be a major issue in the session and the subject of a non-confidence motion.

The Tories, in their election campaign, demanded a raise from $75 to $100 a month.

In their caucus, the Liberals have been wondering how to tackle the Tory assault when it comes.

If they have decided, it wasn't in Tuesday's throne speech.

The government will continue to work for the "effective co-ordination of measures to reduce poverty and increase security across Canada."

In this respect, the Canada Assistance Plan would be used to give assistance to individuals and families in need.

In education, the key new projected legislation, the government recognizes the need for expansion of institutions of higher education and providing "greater and more equitable opportunities for young Canadians to attend such institutions."

When discussions with the provinces have been sufficiently advanced, legislation to carry out this proposal will be placed before you."

The government envisages new steps to turn Ottawa into a "true" capital where all Canadians can "feel at home."

It would continue to work for the "broadening of the bilingual character of the public service."

"The national capital should increasingly reflect the nature of the Canadian society."

This, according to sources here, can be interpreted as an indication of government intention aimed at municipal and provincial authorities involved.

The Throne Speech says only that "banking legislation and related proposals will be placed before you."

to strengthen the Canadian economy.

It promises that the government is moving to "ensure that our prosperity and growth continue."

The Throne Speech takes a rosy view of the future of the economy.

"Our economic efficiency can be improved by concerted efforts to adapt and develop our institutions, both private and governmental, to our real needs."

Improvements in productivity would permit the economy to grow faster, higher standards of living and a better balance in international payments.

The speech also stressed the importance of retraining workers and making people who are unemployed and under-employed more productive.

The government promises a new steps to develop international economic conditions and

Niagara Poses Problem

NIAGARA FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — New York's two U.S. senators said Tuesday that the American Falls, beset by damaging rockslides in recent years, should not be allowed to deteriorate.

Senator Robert F. Kennedy, in a statement read for him, described the American Falls as a "unique resource that cannot be allowed to deteriorate."

The statement and one by Republican Senator Jacob Javits were read at a one-day public hearing called by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, which is trying to determine what steps should be taken to preserve and enhance the scenic beauty of the 162-foot-high cataract on the U.S. side of the Niagara River.

Kennedy, a Democrat, said he had asked State Secretary Dean Rusk to initiate discussions with Canada to enable the International Joint Commission to join in an investigation of the falls' condition.

Firemen Called

Firemen were called to a smoking oil barge around noon Tuesday as a precautionary measure.

A short-circuiting battery caused the smoke on the barge, which was moored at Victoria's industrial reserve.

Members of the joint fire committee for North Saanich and the village of Sidney have been appointed by the North Saanich reeve and the village chairman.

An agreement for establishment of a joint fire protection service for the two areas was approved Friday by the provincial cabinet.

North Saanich has three representatives on the committee and Sidney has two.

Reeve J. B. Cumming has named Coun. Douglas Cook, Coun. George Aylard, and Ardmore resident Clifford Adams to represent North Saanich.

VILLAGE REPS

Sidney Chairman Arthur Freeman has appointed Commissioner John Boshier and Commissioner W. W. Gardner as the village representatives.

The fire chief and two members of the Volunteer Firemen's Association will be ex-officio members of the committee but will have no voting power.

Erratic Woman Driver Fined $400, Suspended

A woman drove a block down Douglas Street Monday night with her headlights off—and in the curb lane on the wrong side of the street.

Daphne Hay, 928 Bay, pleaded guilty in central magistrate's court Tuesday to impaired driving and was fined $400. She was also barred from driving anywhere in Canada for 18 months. Prosecutor Peter Birkett said Miss Hay was driving south on

WRONG SIDE

She held this position for one block, Mr. Birkett said. Her headlights were out.

Five or six northbound cars had to cross to the wrong side to avoid being hit and two entered a service station driveway to dodge the car.

At the intersection of Chatham, Miss Hay's car skidded and finished up in the centre of the intersection.

Mr. Birkett said a policeman came up behind and stopped 75 feet away. Miss Hay then backed up and the policeman was forced to reverse 100 feet to avoid being hit.

The car then went down Chatham into Government and entered Pandora against a red light, court was told.

It was then parked near the Government Street liquor store, half on the sidewalk and half on the road, Mr. Birkett said.

REMOVED KEYS

An off-duty policeman called the city station and removed the keys from the car. A breathalyzer reading of .17 was taken, court was told.

Magistrate William Ostler said to Miss Hay: "Does this recital shock you this morning?"

"Yes," was the reply. Magistrate Ostler: "The increase in serious impaired driving offences is so alarming that it seems to me that nothing short of jail sentences is going to have any effect."

A breaking and entering charge against convicted murderer David Leonard Robinson was withdrawn by the Crown.

The charge alleged that Robinson broke into a house at 3444 Old Island Highway May 3, 1965.

It was while Robinson was being held on this charge that he was charged with murdering Susan Preschl near her View Royal home May 11.

Robinson pleaded guilty to non-capital murder last month and was sentenced to life imprisonment.

Mr. Birkett said he was asking for permission to withdraw the break-in charge on instructions of the attorney-general's office.

A charge of recording bets was quashed by Magistrate Ostler before the Crown's first witness had testified.

This followed an application from defence counsel Dermot Owen-Flood that the charge against Walter Chrane, 349 Cook, was a nullity.

TWO OFFENCES

Mr. Owen-Flood said the charge included two offences "namely that he did unlawfully use or knowingly allow a place under his control to be used for recording bets."

Mr. Owen-Flood claimed the two were entirely separate offences.

"One is active, the other is passive, so to speak," Mr. Owen-Flood said.

After a short adjournment, Magistrate Ostler allowed the motion and quashed the charge.

A habitual criminal hearing against John Norman Lawrence Smith was adjourned to Feb. 22 for continuation.

The hearing, which is before Magistrate J. A. Byers, was due to continue Tuesday but a transcript of the earlier evidence was not available.

An attempt by the Crown to introduce rebuttal evidence against Kenneth Roy was blocked by Magistrate Ostler.

REBUTTAL

After the defence introduced its final witness, prosecutor Peter Birkett called Sgt. John Rickerby to the stand to give rebuttal evidence.

Mr. Birkett said he would attempt to get before the court conversation Sgt. Rickerby had with Roy on the way to the police station.

CROWN CLOSED

Defence counsel Digby Kier objected, saying that the Crown had closed its case.

Magistrate Ostler upheld the objection. He said the Crown could and should have introduced Sgt. Rickerby's evidence earlier.

Magistrate Ostler reserved judgment to Jan. 26.

The Bricklayers' Union dance cost Alan Curtis an extra $50 fine after he was found guilty of assaulting Ingham Hotel beer parlor manager Thomas Higgins. Curtis, address unavailable, had pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Higgins told court a fight had started during the union's dance at the hotel and he saw Curtis fighting with another man.

"I can't engage in discussions with any citizens when the matter is before the courts," he said Tuesday.

New Democrat member William Hartley was unseated recently by a Supreme Court ruling invalidating a 1963 election at Yale. The North Okanagan seat became vacant with the recent death of Sacred George McLeod.

Angus, retired chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, will be made public "in the legislature forthwith" of its receipt, the premier said.

"I have no information on the report, either directly or indirectly," he added.

Parakeets Hungry After TV

PORTLAND (AP) — Dogs may become snappish if exposed to too much television, the Oregon State Board of Health cautioned Monday in its weekly bulletin.

It said it was relaying the findings of a West German study in saying that one hour a day of television watching was plenty for a dog.

The study showed that poodles watching three to four hours daily suffered loss of appetite.

And parakeets, it said, came down with a fever after watching for five hours a day.

A spokesman for the department said the study was reported in a serious journal of veterinary medicine.

Motion Today

Flashlight Fells Suspect

No evidence was offered in County Court Tuesday on behalf of Gary Watt who has pleaded not guilty to attempting to break into the Polynesian Restaurant, 914 Esquimalt, on Aug. 28, 1965.

Defence counsel Brian Smith will place a motion before the court today.

The court was told how the police saw two men behind the restaurant in the early hours of Aug. 28.

DOWN ALLEY

One man was seen crouched near a door, and the other, identified by the police as the defendant, was further down the alley.

The Crown witnesses agreed the lighting was bad at the time.

The police said the men ran away when approached. One escaped but the defendant was brought down by a flashlight thrown by a policeman.

18 Passengers

Bandits Rob Subway

CHICAGO (UPI)—Four gun-packing bandits, one carrying a "Junior Posse" badge and another decked out in a buckskin jacket, herded 18 passengers into the rear of a moving subway-elevated train Tuesday and stripped them of money and valuables.

Police captured four youths hiding in an all-night service station minutes after the bandits fled from the train at an elevated stop. They said the four admitted staging the ill-fated, small-scale robbery.

Six victims identified the holdup men.

THREE MINUTES

Victims said the robbery was carried out in less than three minutes between the time the Englewood-Howard Street train left its last northbound underground station at North and Clybourn Avenue and reached its first elevated stop at Fullerton Avenue.

Three of the robbers herded the passengers to the rear of the rear car, providing dozens of victims to awaken them to the fact they were being robbed and to get them moving.

LOOKED INTO GUN

"I looked right up into the barrel of a gun," one victim told police. "Then I saw that everyone else was standing in the back of the car, so I moved, too."

Other passengers, the conductor and the motorman farther forward in the four-car Chicago Transit Authority train were unaware of what was happening.

WAVED GOODBYE

At the elevated stop, the bandits winked and waved to their victims and leaped out to the platform. The bandit in Buffalo Bill garb shouted:

"Keep your heads inside or we'll blow them off."

As the bandits fled down the stairs to the street, the passengers notified the conductor and motorman. The motorman notified his dispatcher by two-way radio-phone and police were at the scene within minutes.

Centennial Medallion

Gold-Plated Medals Sell Like Hot Cakes

Those big gold centennial medallions which you see around town are like wooden nickels, except they cost a lot more.

They are being sold for 50 cents each and they are not negotiable yet they're going like hot cakes.

Provincial centennial chairman L. J. Wallace said Tuesday that more than 50,000 of the coin-like souvenirs had been distributed during the first three weeks they were on sale.

The two faces of the gold-plated, brass alloy medallions commemorate the centenaries of the union of B.C. in 1866 and of Canadian Confederation in 1867.

The medallions are selling for 50 cents apiece through-the 390

centennial committees throughout the province, and each one sold brings a 20-cent profit which the local centennial group can use for its own projects and events.

Mr. Wallace said 100,000 of the medallions were struck for the promotion by a firm in Vancouver and that they were moving so fast that "we most likely will be mining more."

'Cop Lover'

Offers of Help Given Grocer

NEW YORK (AP)—Offers of help began pouring in Monday for a 36-year-old Puerto Rican grocer who said he was shunned because he helped a white policeman under attack by a Negro mob.

Enrique Negron, lost his business in the Bronx. He said neighbors called him "cop lover" and "Nigger hater." His savings dwindled to $300.

Newspaper stories about his plight aroused the concern of New Yorkers.

Negron said he has been offered jobs by the Staten Island ferry and Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. A former seaman, he said he would probably accept an offer from the National Maritime Union to return to sea.

Meantime, the Small Business

Administration said it was willing to offer Negron a $15,000 loan with up to 15 years to pay.

The federal agency said Negron would not have to put up collateral because his character is "unquestionable."

"Thank God and everybody," Negron said Monday night. "Now at least I have some hope."

Where Is Dynamite?

Explosive Problem

FORT ST. JOHN (CP)—RCMP here are trying to track down three cases of dynamite they believe fell off a truck in the area six days ago.

Police have two theories about the explosives, being transported from Hudson Hope to the Portage Mountain Dam site.

"Either the dynamite is lying in a snowdrift by the roadside," said a police spokesman, "or somebody has picked it up and not reported it."

"We have made extensive searches along the roadside but failed to find it."

It is believed that the dynamite fell off the truck when the back doors of the vehicle flew open. Continuous heavy snowfall in the area has hampered searches.

Winter Multiplies SPCA Problems

Santa's Presents Impounded

By PETER TAYLOR

NANAIMO—On the Nanaimo Lakes Road four cute pups romp around in their pens—they were presents brought by Santa Claus. Unfortunately the puppies weren't welcome, and now they are in the dog pound. Pet giving is common at Christmas, and the dismal aftermath falls upon Inspector Robertson, who has to pick unwanted animals and take them to his pound on the Nanaimo Lakes Road.

This January, Christmas pets weren't his biggest headache, they were stock owners who failed to provide feed during the recent snows.

Knee-high journeys through the snow were not uncommon this month as Inspector Robertson carried feed to stranded horses and cattle.

"In summer these animals earn money for the owners, but in winter they are just put out to graze," he said.

"Some of the pasture was bare before the snow came, and then it became impossible to paw through five feet of snow anyway."

Grazing land is leased from the government and is supposed to be fenced.

Much of this open grazing land is not fenced, Inspector Robertson said, and before winter comes owners should find their stock and make sure they can get feed into them.

In some cases the SPCA must hire a bulldozer to make a track into the animals, rather than let them suffer.

On Friday Inspector Robertson had just inspected horses "which you could hang a hat on their ribs."

"I've seen cases where the stock had been left in the bush, and had eaten twice the size of my finger or gnawed bark off the trees."

All this effort is not done free of charge. The owners of the stock face a feed bill as well as an impounding fee.

But the animal's suffering is given attention, before any moves are made to collect remuneration.

Throughout the recent bad weather, Inspector Robertson never missed on emergency call.

The animal ambulance is operated 24 hours a day, but motorists who report they have hit a dog and drive off are a problem.

He appealed to drivers to stay by the animal, but not to touch it.

"I don't want to be driving up and down the highway at night for four or five miles looking for an injured black dog."

Inspector Robertson is always pleased to hear of prospective homes for his charges. Dogs aren't destroyed right away, he said, "sometimes we keep them for up to a month despite the fact it costs us $3.50 a week to feed them."

He is reluctant to give dogs away for nothing. "If they're not prepared to pay at least $15 then they don't want the dog very much."

On the other hand city residents needn't expect to get a big dog.

These are reserved for country people, where the dog has space to roam.

"I'm only too pleased to give advice if anybody's pet is not acting right, but I won't diagnose or give treatment," Inspector Robertson added, and he's not interested in any animals that are dead.

Biggest year-round problem is loose dogs. There is a leash law within the City of Nanaimo, and any dog not on a lead can be impounded.

The inspector has reminded residents outside the city any dog can be caught by a resident and turned over to him as a stray.

Alberni Mill

Scrubber Failure Outlined

PORT ALBERNI — After a weekend of complaints about a heavy fall of black smog, management of Mac-Powell's Alberni pulp and paper division offered a statement concerning the newly-installed Doyle Scrubber.

"We are pushing for fly ash abatement work, despite a setback over the holiday."

FAN ORDERED
"A new fan was ordered immediately and has been undergoing tests."

"It will be installed and the scrubber will be in operation again today."

DISCUSSIONS
"Mill management pointed out that the Doyle scrubber is still considered experimental equipment and the mill staff will build discussions in Port Alberni next week with president and chief engineer of the company which manufactures the scrubber."

VISITING EXPERTS

As well as reporting the performance of the scrubber division staff will discuss with the visiting experts more effective alternate methods and equipment in connection with the fly ash problem.

"We are concerned with the problem and are bending every effort to rectify it."

Free Drugs

Socred Urges Addicts' Centre

NANAIMO—Trying to solve Canada's drug addict problem by putting offenders in jail is like trying to dig the Panama Canal with a toothpick, said an MLA Tuesday.

Speaking to Nanaimo Kiwanis was Alex Matthews, Social Credit MLA for Vancouver Centre, and chairman of the legislature's private bills committee.

Mr. Matthews wants a program like that in the United Kingdom, where free treatment by injection is given to addicts at regular clinics.

"By giving free injections we would be cutting the feet from under the people who are selling the stuff," he said.

"How long are we going to sit idly by and see our sons and daughters enfeebled?"

"This system works in England."

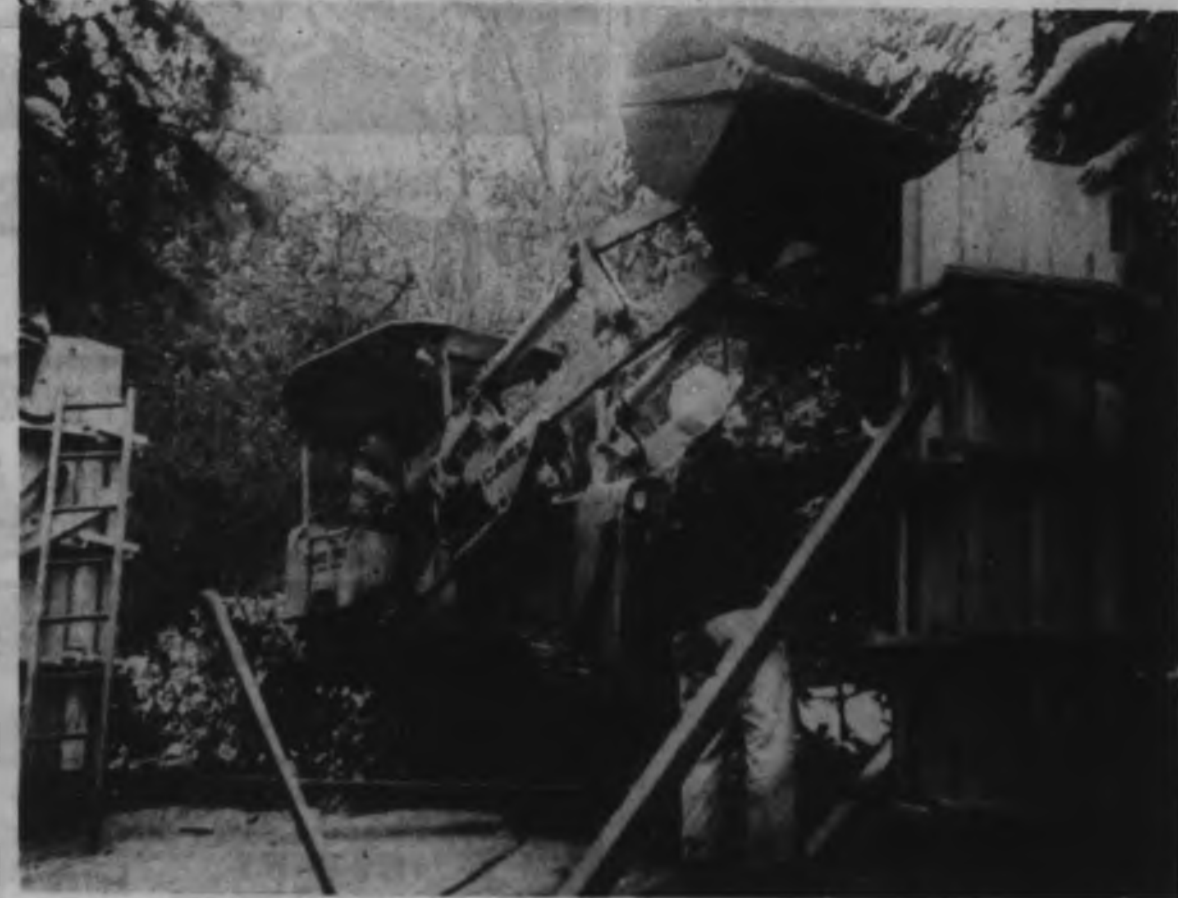

"We've tried everything else and it's proved a rotten failure, so what have we got to lose?"

A drug addict needs $50 a day to satisfy his needs, and the MLA urged his listeners to ask Woodwards, Hudson's Bay or Eaton's in Vancouver how much money they lose through thefts by addicts.

Behind the dope racket this MLA saw a murky cartel of people in high places.

"The police will never be successful in eradicating these people until we take the huge profits away from them."

Mr. Matthews said he had ap-

Ambulance Operator Up in Air Over Aid

NANAIMO — Gordon Wagner, operator of Island Ambulance Services, is waiting anxiously to see if city council grants him his $500 a month increase in his ambulance subsidy.

Statistics are against him. Last year he asked for an increase and got nothing. The year before he was luckier and got a $25 a month increase, which brings his present subsidy to $125 month.

At city council Monday the aldermen didn't say yes or no but referred his request to the finance committee.

They did decide to write to Health Minister Eric Martin to ask his department to take over the service.

POSITION CLEAR

"I don't know why they keep doing this," Mr. Wagner said. "Mr. Martin made his position clear at the opening of the new Ladysmith Hospital wing."

In Ladysmith last Saturday Mr. Martin held out no hope of BCHS taking over ambulances.

TWO VEHICLES

Island Ambulances Service has two vehicles, both more than 10 years old. A 1953 model needs a new transmission and motor. With a $625-a-month subsidy Mr. Wagner maintains he could purchase a new ambulance.

SOME ASSISTANCE

On Tuesday he said he wasn't in favor of a completely free service, but believed the government should take over some of the financing.

"Once you start a free service you get a lot of calls that are not really ambulance calls, and these all require more equipment and more men," he said.

Last year Mr. Wagner said he had his first holiday in 13 years. This was just a week and he described it "as the most wonderful experience I've ever had."

When applying for the increased subsidy Mr. Wagner said he was willing to continue with-

Nanaimo Break and Entry

Youth Jailed 18 Months

NANAIMO—Gary Manson, 17, Nanaimo, was sentenced to 18 months definite and a year in determinate in police court after pleading guilty to four charges of breaking and entering.

Last Thursday Manson was arrested after break-ins at Sports Centre Cleaners, AC Electric, Nanaimo Office Assistance and a CPR box car. Manson had a previous record.

Protection For Carvings

Parks Branch workers are busy building shelters to protect the old Indian carvings at Petroglyph Park on the southern outskirts of Nanaimo. Work will provide protection from both weather and vandals. Here crew pours concrete for pillars to support roof. Work will take about one month. (Agnes Fleet)

Jaycees Honor Blood Donors

Special Army Clinic Postpones Awards

NANAIMO — Annual trophies awarded for blood drives here will not be presented until March 4 after the special clinic at the army camp.

Jaycee Bob Stevens said Tuesday the Junior Chamber of Commerce trophy for best percentage of donors by any organization and the Nanaimo Realty trophy for most pints donated will be awarded as usual.

The Jan. 13 and 14 local blood drive was not handled by the Jaycees because the local Red Cross Branch ran its own clinic at which a record 862 pints were collected.

Mr. Stevens said the army camp could not be fitted in during the regular clinic but the Red Cross agreed to come back to Nanaimo when the Che-mainus drive is in progress.

Assault Brings $250 Fine

DUNCAN — John E. Cotterill was fined $250 and was ordered to be of good conduct for one year after his conviction for assaulting and injuring Owen Brown, Lake Cowichan, Nov. 27 on the Trans-Canada Highway here. The incident followed a minor motor vehicle accident.

Nanaimo Student Symphony Soloist

Amateurs Love Classics

DUNCAN — Under the baton of Dr. Heinz Kilian of Duncan, the Nanaimo Symphony will present its main concert of the winter season, Sunday, Feb. 6, at Woodlands High School with works by Beethoven, Schubert, and Rossini.

Dr. Kilian has been the Nanaimo Orchestra's conductor for three seasons.

Every Sunday he and musicians from various Island points travel to Nanaimo for rehearsals.

Highlight of the Feb. 6 concert will be the solo performance of Beethoven's Romance in F-Major by Nanaimo High School student Ian Rudkin who is concertmaster of the orchestra.

Other items on the program

Crash Kills Woman

DUNCAN — A middle-aged woman was killed about midnight Tuesday when her car was in collision with a lumber truck on Government Street here.

Police would not disclose her name. It appeared she was on her way to work at King's Daughters' Hospital.

Eye-witnesses said her older model car crossed the road into the path of the south-bound truck.

Duncan, Indian Councils

Handshake Seals Peace Pact In the Valley

By KLAUS MUENTER

DUNCAN—There is peace in the valley again. The peace was signed by a handshake between Mayor Jack Dobson and Indian Chief Mike Underwood.

Traditional good relations between the city and the band some months ago deteriorated when Indian band officials said the band should get some of the taxes the city is collecting from businesses located on Indian land.

GOOD RELATIONS
Tuesday night's meeting saw good relations restored.

Both councils decided to set up committees to discuss unresolved questions.

Chief Underwood said "I hope our city will grow bigger and bigger in times to come."

PLANNING CONSULTANT
Introducing questions the Indians wished to raise was Vancouver planning consultant R. A. Williams.

One of the first questions asked under what authority the city collected taxes from businesses on Indian land.

MUNICIPAL ACT
"I am amazed," said Mayor Dobson, "under the Municipal Act we have this authority."

Spot back Indian councillor Able Joe "We do not understand this answer."

Said the mayor: "We have nothing to hide."

City clerk Gordon Berry told the meeting the city collects $17,394 in these taxes, $8,221 for general purpose, $8,982 for school tax.

Ald. Jim Saunders said, "If you develop the land, then you will collect the taxes."

"But then you will have to pay the city for water and sewer."

HOLD LAND
One alderman said, "If all your land was taxable you would have to get business and lease your land, or you wouldn't hold on to it."

But Chief Underwood replied with a smile, "If we had got money for all our timber on the island, we would not be sitting here talking about money."

FUTURE BRIGHT
Mayor Dobson and Chief Underwood said future meetings of the two committees should improve relations and iron out misunderstandings.

Nanaimo Marine Areas

Zoning Rules Puzzle City Planners

NANAIMO—The city is in the throes of amending its zoning bylaws and at the moment the Advisory Planning Commission is doing the bulk of the head-scratching.

Number one bone of contention is a new designation, Marine Services.

Most of this section says "no building or part thereof and no land shall be used for purposes other than those which are designed to meet the needs of the boating public."

HARBOR ZONE
Before the bylaw and this section in particular is given final approval by the commission, a meeting will be held with the Harbor Commission to discuss the area between Millstream River and Beechin Point.

Afterward the new bylaw will have to be passed by city council.

Outside the marine services section, front yard requirements for apartments are taking a revolutionary direction.

PARKING LOTS
Most cities have a minimum of 20 feet; under the new bylaw Nanaimo may have 12½ feet.

This step was taken to encourage apartment builders to turn the rear of their properties into parking lots, if they want to.

CHIEF TOPICS
Other topics and speakers are:

Feb. 9, general aspects of regional districts, director of administration branch C. H. L. Woodward;

Feb. 16, regional and community planning and subdivision control and building regulations, director of regional planning division Don South;

Feb. 23, financial aspects of regional districts, director of finance and statistics W. K. Smith.

LAST TALK
The last lecture to be given March 2 by assistant deputy minister of municipal affairs J. D. Baird will be a review of the entire course.

Adult education director in the Cowichan School District Fred Cummings stressed, "this is an important public service course presented impartially by our adult education division in this district."

"This course is designed to inform the general public which is the first obligation of an adult education program."

QUESTION TIME
Mr. Cummings said each lecture will be followed by a question period.

He concluded "this course should be a must for all municipal officials and interested citizens."

Dr. Kilian practises at home will be: Symphony 40 by Mozart, Unfinished Symphony by Schubert, Chaconne by Purcell and La Gazza Ladra by Rossini.

Dr. Kilian said there are about 30 musicians in the orchestra now, including several army and navy music students from Victoria. Other musicians come from Lake Cowichan and Cowichan Bay.

Dr. Kilian said all members of the Nanaimo Symphony are amateurs and they come and play "for the sake of music."

He said, "They know very well that we will never reach the height of a professional orchestra, that is impossible. But we come together regularly because everyone loves music."

"You could say we carry out pioneer work in this field and to every orchestra member music means a lot."

Officers Elected To OAP

Mr. E. Cowden was elected president of the Old Age Pensioners' Association No. 1, Ladies' Auxiliary at the recent annual meeting.

Mrs. R. French was named honorary president.

Other officers elected were: Mrs. V. Warren, first vice-president; Mrs. E. Hawkins, recording secretary and publicity chairman; Mrs. C. Nuttall, treasurer.

Named to the executive were Mrs. L. Cuthbert, Mrs. G. Lindsay, Mrs. V. Prior, Mrs. L. Ashworth and Mrs. G. Sherwood.

Four new members were installed at the meeting. They were Mrs. M. McDermott, Mrs. R. Renfrew, Mrs. S. Westwater and Mrs. V. Prior.

Refreshments were served by Mrs. Margaret Jones and Mrs. Ethel Vermeire.

Fact or Fable?

Onion, Sock Around Neck Ancient Cures for Cold

NEW YORK (UPI)—Reach for the nose wipers if you "have a cold in the head."

But maybe you ought to dangle an onion around your throat, wrap a sock-soiled around your neck, and for good measure, down a horseradish cocktail.

You make the latter by managing to dissolve horseradish in sugar water. Don't laugh. Our ancestors used such remedies when fighting chills, coughs, fevers and runny noses.

Belief in power of the onion started with ancient man, carried right through to the Egyptians and persisted up to the twentieth century.

All these oddments about colds come from "44 facts and fables about coughs and colds"—a new booklet issued by the Vick Chemical Co. at the peak of the sniffle season.

The onion, according to old historians, was believed to have germ-killing qualities. Science, oddly, has proven that onions contain germ-killing chemical bullets.

Puritan America had the best idea about the onion, however. The view then was that "anything that smells that bad must be good for you."

String came into the cold war before socks advanced to the neck for medical reasons. String around the neck or head was believed to keep the spirit of life in the sick part.

At one time in man's saga against disease, a red or black string around the throat was considered a sure-fire way of preventing colds in the head and throat.

Necks got soaked along about the 17th century. The sock had to be red and soiled—worn at least once by a strong, healthy soul.

The rule for socking a cold, the foot part must be applied directly to the throat. The whole routine is useless unless a woman uses a man's sock—and a man, a woman's.

One old-time remedy that still meets with favor among those who doctor themselves: hang your hat on the bedpost, climb into bed and sip whiskey until you see two hats.

Facts about colds prove that you can have four types of colds at once, according to science. That's a grand slam.

If you have a runny nose, that's rhinitis. If nose and throat are irritated, you have nasopharyngitis. A cough from a reddened throat is tracheitis. When the cough migrates to the chest, you've got bronchitis.

The booklet reminds that in this doctored era, best reach for the phone if temperature rises about 100 degrees. Call the doctor.

But before that, even ancient remedies might help. The cynic maintains that all colds act one way, saying:

"Call a doctor and it goes away in seven days. Don't call a doctor and it goes away in seven days."

Fashion Jargon Double Talk

By KELLY SMITH

NEW YORK (AP)—Double-talk is a skill monopolized by the fashion world. A first grader knows the primary colors: Red, blue and yellow.

But go to a fashion show, read a magazine or drop in your department store and see if you can find them.

There's subtle sunset, perlimmon, cabbage, wicker, flash lightning, twin leopard, vanilla ice, fire alarm, spring orchard,

Instead of green, light green or dark green, there's spring green, sprig green, baseball green, wild green, grass green, barley green, ice green, chartreuse, deep chartreuse and lime.

UNRECOGNIZABLE

You wouldn't recognize "cavalar" as the latest term for black, or "martini" instead of tan.

A description of a dress might read: "Here's Marge in a spring orchard of neo-oriental blue-baseball stripes topped by French-vanilla cuffs, ginger facing and robin's-egg buttons."

In English, that means Marge is wearing a blue and white striped dress with a white collar and cuffs.

"I deal in red, white and blue," says designer Victor Joris. "Someone else makes out what to call it. I don't always recognize my own clothes."

Joris isn't the only one who's confused.

Cashier to Chairman

VANCOUVER (CP)—Ten days after her 17th birthday, her father started Mary Dunhill as a cashier in the family tobacco business.

Today she is chairman of the board of the business—the giant Dunhill tobacco enterprise of England.

Her brother Albert, president of the company, says she had to earn the right to join him in running Dunhills. She did, with a vengeance.

In an interview here he said his sister, Mrs. Rex Lane in private life, is the brains of the company, while he is the expert on the products they manufacture and distribute.

He said she did much of the work that led to the expansion of the company into France, the United States and Canada.

"I've enjoyed it," says the mother of two daughters and grandmother of five.

"I love working and I'm sorry for women who have no other interest than raising a family," Miss Dunhill says she likes smoking.

"I like to smoke a pipe when I'm at home and relax—you know, by the fire with a good book."

During the busy day she sticks to cigarettes.

ANN LANDERS

Dear Ann Landers: I live in Denver. If I lived in Chicago I would go right to your office and give you a kiss for the letter you printed about the woman who is going through the menopause and whose husband thought she was complaining just to get attention. I am married to the same kind.

For over a year I have had dizzy spells and hot flashes. One minute I feel like I am burning up. Ten minutes later I have to put on a sweater. Last week I got a terrible hot flash during a bridge game. Max and I have a set game every Thursday night with my sister and her husband.

"Thank God it wasn't strangers," I said. "Max, I'm hot. Please open the window."

He said, "In five minutes you'll be telling me to turn up the heat. I think you are getting nutty."

A person who hasn't gone through the change can't imagine what it's like. Please print this letter and I will put it right under Max's chopped herring tonight.—GRATEFUL

Dear Grateful: Here's your letter and I'd like to add a word of my own. Any wife who goes to the trouble of making chopped herring for her husband deserves extra love and consideration. Now, aren't you ashamed of yourself, Max?

Dear Ann Landers: I am 12 years old and need your advice already.

Yesterday was Mom's birthday. Us kids didn't remember her with a card or anything and neither did Dad. Mom was very quiet until dinner time. Then all of a sudden she said, "I guess I am only a housekeeper and laundry woman around here. Nobody cares about me. Not one of you remembered that today was my birthday."

Dad said he was sorry but he had a lot on his mind lately. My older sister almost cried. My little brother went to his room and got his piggy bank. He tried to give it to Mom but she wouldn't take it.

We love Mom and feel very sorry about this. What can we do to make her happy again?

FAMILY TROUBLES
Dear Family: It's too late to do anything about Mom's birthday this year, so stop trying. She will cheer up faster if you are sweet and helpful around the house.

Get a 1966 calendar now and mark off Mom's birthday a week in advance so you don't forget next year. And be sure to remind your Dad. He may have a lot on his mind a year from now, too.

Dear Ann Landers: Four months ago I married a wonderful man. It was a second marriage for both of us. He has three children.

I was born and raised in another part of the country and I'm doing my best to make friends here. The big problem is that I have never met my husband's parents although they live less than five miles from us. My husband says very little about them but I know they are fond of his former wife and children.

Am I being rude by not making the first move? A friend of mine says it is up to me to invite my in-laws to our home. Is she right? Please give me some advice.—STICKY WICKET

Dear Sticky: This whole deal smells like a strong wind from a glue factory. Either your husband's parents have told your husband that they don't wish to meet you, or he has not had the nerve to suggest it. You are entitled to know the truth. Ask him.

Grit Directions May Change---and Leadership Too

Pallid Plans Point Up Pearson Dilemma

By RON COLLISTER
Colonist Ottawa Bureau
OTTAWA — Prime Minister Pearson's blueprint for this session of parliament gropes with the challenge of the double squeeze.

with a whole new slate of ideas at a time when party leadership and party direction may be changing.

The throne speech that the government placed in the hands of Governor-General Vanier Tuesday read like the tail-end of a four-year program accidentally interrupted by the Nov. 8 election.

● There is so much house-keeping to be done in this session that there won't be much time for legislation, anyway.

Before the end of March, the Commons has to approve spending estimates of more than $7,000,000,000, then move to the spending for the next year.

The 2,500-word speech showed hardly any signs of the change in direction that is expected from the resignation of finance minister Walter Gordon, his replacement by Mitchell Sharp, and the arrival in the cabinet of Trade Minister Robert Winters.

This change will probably be seen in the Spring budget.

In the throne speech, there is a hint of a victory for Mr. Gordon in the retention of the proposed Canada Development Corporation.

But is it a victory?
A government spokesman said last night that the corporation does not have high rating among proposed legislation.

And there is speculation that leaving it in the throne speech is a step towards quiet scrapping next year.

The throne speech was mainly a replay of the speech that General Vanier read in the same senate chamber on April 5 last year, plus a promise to implement a handful of election promises.

Avoided are:

● Any depth discussion of the threat of inflation.

The speech says only that "it

Tired-Blood Speech Opposition Agrees

Vanier reads speech

By FRASER KELLY
Colonist Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—Led by Conservative Chief John Diefenbaker, opposition leaders vehemently tore the Throne Speech apart Tuesday, serving notice that the 27th Parliament could be one of the longest and roughest on record.

Branding the speech "pallid, weak and anemic," Mr. Diefenbaker indicated he would seize the earliest opportunity to move no confidence in the government. (See Pages 3 and 5.)

'CONDEMN IT'

And he exhorted all other opposition groups to join him in condemnation of the government for refusing to boost old age pensions from $15 to $100. "We intend to demand the increase when the opportunity arises. No excuses for not defeating the government will be acceptable for those who are in need today," he said.

DIEFENBAKER ANGERED

He pointed out that a defeat of the government in the House would not necessarily mean another election. Governor-General Vanier could call on him to form a government.

Any hope that the last six months away from the Commons had mellowed Mr. Diefenbaker or his followers evaporated with the throne speech.

'FORCES FIGHT'

"The speech forces us to fight," said former agriculture minister Alvin Hamilton. "There eventually has to be a confrontation on this (pension) issue. Mr. Diefenbaker said the speech was a 'photostat copy of the last one' and it indicated the government has done nothing for 200 days."

NO HOPE

"There's no hope in it for the old-age pensioners or the veterans, nothing to meet the rising cost of living. If you can find any inspiration in the production of such an anemic document, you'll be one of the few," he told a newsmen.

Mr. Diefenbaker said the whole government program showed a "conversion" in Liberal policy from former finance minister Walter Gordon to Trade and Commerce Minister Robert Winters.

'WATERED DOWN'

"Everything seems to have been watered down to meet the wishes of the new Toronto minister," he said.

He said Mr. Gordon's proposal of a Canadian Development Corporation was "just placed in the throne speech for decorative effect. There will be no serious effort to bring it in."

A 'PUNY' SPEECH

Asked to describe the speech in one word, Mr. Diefenbaker paused, then said: "Puny."

Banking News Cheerful

Premier Bennett Tuesday labelled the Throne speech from Ottawa a "milk and water" speech for children, rather than a "tea and coffee" one for adults.

"To be fair," he said after reading press reports of the opening of Parliament, "no government gives too much of its policy in a speech from the Throne."

DEALT WITH LATER

"Policy takes money, and money comes with the budget," which is dealt with later in the session, he said.

The premier was pleased to

Ironsi Keeps Lid on Nigeria As 50 Officers Executed

LAGOS (AP)—An army power struggle has followed Nigeria's military take-over with perhaps as many as 50 officers reported executed and an unsuccessful attempt made to assassinate the country's new leader, Maj. Gen. Aguiyi Ironsi.

Ironsi claimed, however, that all military units in the country had pledged loyalty to his new regime.

MURDER ATTEMPT

Reliable sources said the confused army struggle was a round Ironsi and between rival factions. They said up to 50 officers had been executed. A lieutenant-colonel was executed for attempting to kill Ironsi.

Officials in London reported earlier Ironsi seemed in control. Backing this up, Britain said it had given full diplomatic recognition to the new government in its former colony.

BODIES FOUND
Meanwhile, a Nigerian government confirmed the death of former finance minister, Chief Festus Okotie Eboh, whose body, together with those of five other persons, has been found in a shallow grave some 30 miles outside this federal capital.

TO SAVE BLOODSHED

He said he moved to crush the rebellion, found the rebels did not want to fight and was asked by politicians to take over to save further bloodshed.

But there were reports the rebel officers moved in on the army chief Saturday giving him a choice, as they gave many other top military men, of joining or dying.

Bennett Flays Ottawa

CUT DELAYS FERRY PLAN

By JACK FRY
Legislative Reporter

Premier Bennett announced Tuesday that British Columbia would delay its plans for building one or two more ferries because of the subsidy cut announced this week in Ottawa.

Shoots Colleagues

Nuclear Expert Berserk

UPTON, N.Y. (UPI)—A nuclear engineer, described as "a very quiet and friendly person," went berserk at the Atomic Energy Commission's Brookhaven laboratory Tuesday, shot three fellow scientists, attempted to shoot a fourth and then committed suicide.

Chief of Suffolk County detectives Oray Edwards said that Michael Maresca, 34, came to work at the sprawling, 3,500-acre laboratory armed with a shotgun, stripped to the waist and with nail polish or lipstick daubed Indian-fashion on his chest and forehead.

Edwards said Maresca first entered one of the large labs where James Powell, 33, another nuclear engineer, was sitting at a desk by the door.

FIRE BLAST

Without uttering a word, Maresca fired one blast at Powell, striking him in the chest. Maresca then ran down a corridor to an office where he shot associate physicist Martin Zuker in the hip and hand. He then went to a laboratory room where Leif Hjarne, a visiting assistant physicist from Sweden, was seated with his back toward the door.

SHOT IN BACK

Maresca shot Hjarne in the back. The berserk scientist then fired another shot through the door of assistant chemical engineer Russell Biets' laboratory, but missed him.

Maresca then dashed outside to his car, placed the shotgun barrel inside his mouth and pulled the trigger. He was dead when co-workers and police got to his car.

He was commenting on the announcement made Monday by Transport Minister Pickersgill that a restored but reduced federal shipbuilding subsidy would not apply to vessels built by provincial governments.

The premier said this decision was aimed "right against British Columbia" and that it was just part of Mr. Pickersgill's "anti-British Columbia point of view."

SHORTSIGHTED

"It's too bad when the federal government would rather give a subsidy to the CPR, a private firm, than to a ferry system which is operated by the government," he said.

"This is a very shortsighted policy, completely unworthy of the federal government."

The premier then asked, through the medium of the press, for Prime Minister Pearson to "take a second look" at Mr. Pickersgill's decision.

PLANS DELAYED

"I find it hard to believe this would be the considered and final policy of his government. 'Until we learn more definite word, we won't build any more ferries for a while,' said Mr. Bennett.

He said plans for building "one or two more ships" would be delayed, but not scrapped completely, because "We won't let any foolish policy in Ottawa hold British Columbia up."

SISTER SHIP

The premier did not elaborate on what ships would be held up, but it was understood that one of them might have been a sister ship for the sea-going Queen of Prince Rupert, which is nearing completion at Victoria Machinery Depot in Victoria.

"There might be a little jealousy on Ottawa's part because our ferry fleet is larger than their navy," he concluded.

DOESN'T MAKE SENSE

Yarrows Ltd. general manager John Wallace agreed with Premier Bennett that the move seemed directed against the provincial government.

"It doesn't appear to make much sense to me that when subsidies are in effect for other classifications of building that it should not apply to provincial government ferries. It would appear this was aimed at B.C.," he said.

TENDERS HELD UP

"What effect it will have on the industry is difficult to say at this time," he said.

He added that builders believed tenders for construction of a second Prince Rupert ferry were being held for a decision on the subsidy.

"We can seriously hope the B.C. government will continue to call tenders for ferries in B.C.," he said.

He said that conditions in B.C. were different from other parts of Canada where the federal government, through the Canadian National Railways, operates car and rail car ferries.

Rhodesian Spirits Reach High Point

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (LAT) — Rain and the Nigerian military coup, plus official assurances that gasoline supplies are adequate, combined Tuesday to raise white Rhodesians' spirits to the highest point since Christmas.

Much of Matabeland, the cattle-growing southwestern region, continued to get rain which started last Saturday, although much more is needed to end the two-year drought in some districts. Cattlemen hoped they would not have to carry out a government plan to move their stock to the northeast. Some cattle already have been brought to fields within sight of Salisbury.

The crisis in Nigeria gave encouragement to Rhodesians who feel the developments there will bring new pressures on British Prime Minister, Harold Wilson to ease his economic sanctions against the regime of Premier Ian Smith.

A government official saw the Nigerian coup as the biggest boost thus far to British Conservatives in Parliament, who are seeking a settlement with Smith without the prior destruction of the Rhodesian economy.

"With the Nigerian Federation on the brink of disintegrating, even Wilson must have doubts about pushing Rhodesia toward black majority rule," a Rhodesian official said.

And British taxpayers, regardless of their party, must question the wisdom of airlifting goods to Zambia at enormous cost in order to prevent the disruption of normal trade patterns which has already taken place between Rhodesia, Zambia and other nations. The sanctions may already have done permanent damage to the economy here and some observers fear the damage will ultimately have to be paid for by Britain if the Smith regime collapses.

Smith aides believe this point is setting across to visiting members of Britain's Parliament, at least to the Tories who see in the Nigerian developments the possibility that British troops might be sent to aid in restoring order.

Smith's assurances to the nation Monday night were generally well received in Salisbury, particularly his pledge that gasoline rations will not be cut. Uncertainty over this issue was one of the most telling effects of British oil sanctions. But industry spokesmen confirmed Tuesday that the five oil companies operating here have total stocks of 200,000 tons of gasoline and diesel fuel.

TWO YEARS

This is claimed to be enough to fill Rhodesia's needs for two years at current ration levels, and few persons doubt that alternative crude oil supplies will appear if the embargo drags on.

With even less priority motor-vehicles, Rhodesians were accepting cheerfully the fact that the country would get only 400 down town buses in the first quarter of 1966, although normal consumption is 1,400 down town.

OLYMPICS

Tennis fans could take heart in the fact that the Rhodesian Lawn Tennis Association has entered the 1966 Davis Cup tournament with no rejection.

Rhodesians have also been told that Avery Brundage, president of the International Olympic Committee, has already ruled that he sees no bar to Rhodesia's entry in the 1968 Mexico City games.

Tired-Blood Speech

Douglas described the throne speech as "largely warmed-over leftovers, truly pedestrian, devoid of any new dynamic programs."

"There's nothing here to challenge the strong and excite the daring," he said using the same words Prime Minister Pearson had used in the 1963 campaign. "It looks as if the Fulton-Favreau Formula (to repatriate the constitution) is as dead as a doornail. It would like to have seen clear-cut statements on medicare and financial assistance to education," he said.

LIBERALS 'HEDGING'

Mr. Douglas said the government seemed to be hedging on its commitment to produce national medicare by 1967 on the provision that all provinces agree to its program.

He maintained that the government should produce medicare legislation which would permit the provinces to join when they want one at a time.

TRIED BEFORE

That procedure, he said, had been followed when the hospital and diagnostic services act was introduced.

He also criticized the government for its failure to propose to increase in old age pensions. But he indicated that he would not help defeat the government on the issue.

"We have to give them a reasonable amount of time to see what they can do," he said. Last Sunday he urged that the government accept amendments to the Throne Speech without considering them a loss of confidence.

Credit leader Raul Couette said it was "full of empty rhetoric... a nothing speech."

DEPLORES FAILURE

He too deplored the government's failure to mention an increase in old age pensions or family allowances. And he said his group would oppose any aid to education which he maintained is within provincial jurisdiction.

He said that before the government gives $25,000,000 to the Asian Bank, it should lend more money to the provinces and municipalities.

CLARIFYING OMISSION

Scored leader Robert Thompson said one of the most glaring omissions was the government's failure to announce its intention to implement the new rules of the House of Commons.

"There was no mention of the Fowler recommendations on broadcasting," he said. Instead the new secretary of state (Judy LaMarsh) is offering a government film industry. Let's hope she doesn't play the star."

'A REBIRTH'

Former Conservative Minister Alvin Hamilton said it was "the rebirth of last year's Throne Speech, very disappointing on the matter of pensions."

"They must have known the OCF and ourselves really feel something must be done about pensions."

"I think it is becoming more and more evident the government is moving back to the old managerial type of government — I call it economic drift. There was no awareness of the tight-rope between inflation and depression," he said.

New Democrat Deputy Leader David Lewis said: "There is nothing to suggest the government has any plans to deal with the period of automation and scientific revolution we are in.

"There is nothing new or modern in the speech. It doesn't contain a word about pensions, a syllable about family allowances," he added.

Officials Back Appeals For Sukarno

SINGAPORE (UPI)—Ranking Indonesian officials appeared to be scrambling to get behind President Sukarno late Tuesday night by issuing appeals to the people to stand solidly behind the president.

Radio Jakarta, monitored in Singapore, was jammed with appeals from officials, including cabinet ministers.

The appeals, and resulting pledges of support, began Sunday when the powerful nationalist party (PNI) offered its unequivocal support to the 64-year-old president.

HAD TALKS

The radio said Sukarno sat down for a "heart-to-heart talk" Tuesday with leaders of the student union movement which had organized demonstrations against rising prices and the president's cabinet. An order was issued Sunday banning the demonstrations.

Sukarno reportedly told the students their actions were improper and could easily be exploited by a group that is "unhappy about the unity" between himself and the students.

The radio also reported that Sukarno thought the students were being encouraged by "an organized body."

Appeals from officials for the people to rally behind Sukarno followed the disclosure Monday night that the president feared a plot against his government.

Aid Asian Bank

'Step Toward Peace' Asked by Johnson

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Declaring it was a step toward peace, President Johnson asked congress Tuesday to let the U.S. join the new Asian Development Bank and contribute $200,000,000 to its funds.

The bank, which will be run by Asians and located in Manila, will have as its prime purpose lending money to Asian countries to develop everything from industrial capacity to roads and harbors.

BIG START

The institution would have an authorized capital of $1,000,000,000, with the U.S. subscribing to 20 per cent of the total. Asian countries will supply 65 per cent, and European and other nations the rest.

Johnson first announced U.S. willingness to participate in the bank in a speech in Baltimore last April—the same one in which he called for "unconditional discussions" to end the Vietnam war.

EMPHASIZES HOPE

In a message to congress calling for prompt approval of U.S. participation, Johnson emphasized his hope for the development of Asia in circumstances of peace. Wednesday, he will ask congress for more than $12,000,000,000 to help finance the U.S. fighting effort in Vietnam.

The president said U.S. participation in the Asian bank "brings us nearer that day when our resources — and the world's — can be devoted to the constructive works of peace, not the destructive forces of war."

VITAL TO PEACE

Johnson further declared that he was proposing U.S. participation "because of my urgent belief that the works of peace in Asia — the building of roads, dams, harbors, power plants, and all the other public and private facilities essential to a modern economy — are vital to peace in the entire world."

hear that revision would be done on banking legislation, which might give the province a better chance of getting a charter for a Bank of B.C.

HIGHER GRANTS

He said he hoped the federal government's plans for increased grants to universities and a scholarship program would be made public before budget time in the provincial legislature.

Asked whether he would consider altering the budget for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1966, if more federal money was available in these areas, Mr. Bennett replied:

UNTIL LAST DAY

"My budget is never finalized until the last day—we are always willing to take a second look in British Columbia."

The premier would not comment on whether he thought $500,000,000 would be enough for establishment of a health resources fund. (Health Minister Eric Martin said recently he did not think this would be enough.)

Announcement that the government would continue to delay federal construction projects in areas where the construction industry was under heavy pressure from private building would probably not apply to British Columbia, Mr. Bennett said.

The industrial trend was in Toronto and Montreal rather than B.C., he said.

NO NEED

This had already been pointed out to the federal government and there was no need for a cutback here in federal projects, said the premier.

His advice to Ottawa: "Canada has got to drive its economic system at 70 and 80 miles an hour instead of 20 miles an hour."

Cigarette Smoking Adds to Pollution

By JOSEPH MOLNER, MD

Dear Dr. Molner: I read that one health authority says that "the air pollution we breathe daily is equivalent to smoking two packs of cigarettes a day."

Even a common, meal dish, water like myself knows better than that. I've been when I used to smoke two packs a day I had a chronic cough and chest pain, and even coughed up blood at times.

After banishing the habit, my cough and chest pains ceased entirely, yet I'm still breathing that so-called air pollution.

I also have two nieces who smoked and had troubles. When they broke the habit, they felt better, too—T.C.

I don't know what "health authority" you are quoting, but I think he's quite a mathematician if he thinks that he can translate "air pollution" into so many cigarettes, or so many packs.

No two people smoke cigarettes like the same way. Some inhale deeply, some don't. Some light a cigarette and wave it around and throw it away half smoked. Others smoke it down to the last half inch. "Two packs a day" means different things. So does "air pollution."

There's one thing for sure, and only about one: No matter how much or how little air pollution there is, it's a lot worse for the fellow who adds his own personal pollution from smoking.

Two bad things are worse than one. Let's not waste too much time trying to decide which kind of air pollution is "worse." If either is harmful, let's try to reduce it.

Dear Dr. Molner: My husband had a heart attack two months ago. X-rays now have revealed an enlarged heart. Does a heart ever return to normal size with proper medication, etc.—Mrs. N.H.

A heart enlarges as part of nature's endeavor to compensate for a defect or weakness in the heart. Sometimes there may be some reduction in size if, in one manner or another, the defect is corrected, but it is not to be expected that the heart
